Where They Make Tires
Never So Cheap, So Good
A Giant of the Air
Two Days to Europe

—By Arthur Brisbane—

AKRON, O., Oct. 22—In this city they make the tires on which Americans ride around, in the far north end of Alaska, the farthest-south road in Florida, down where Texas runs out into the Gulf and all the territory between. Today Mr. Firestone gave a luncheon at his house and invited the heads of two of his big competitors, Goodyear and Goodrich tires.

There appears to be perfect harmony in the automobile industry, at luncheon if not everywhere.

Few realize how big an industry it is that supplies rubber wheels to thirty millions of American automobiles, or to what marvelous perfection the machinery and art of tire making have been brought.

The factories, Goodrich, Goodyear and Firestone, visited under Mr. Firestone's guidance, are each a gigantic city in itself.

At one end of buildings that stretch for miles is unloaded the crude rubber that comes in crinkly mats from tropical forests across the ocean.

Machines directed by skilful men and women handle the rubber, to which is applied heat, expansion, cold water, soapstone, other treatments innumerable.

Thousands of miles of cord fabric using the best grades of cotton are added to the rubber.

Long line of machines and workers turns out the tubes, another produces the tires. The great majority of tires are made to carry the millions of light cars that cover every road in this country. Others, thick, wide and heavy, are strong enough for a truckload of 50,000 pounds at high speed.

Automobile tires were never as cheap as they are now, never as good. The tire that was proud to run 4000 miles only a little while ago now runs 15,000 and 20,000 miles before its life ends.

Rubber that cost a dollar a pound and more while the British were skilfully manipulating their monopoly now sells for 3½ cents a pound.

Harvey Firestone, who is young and looks ahead, does not intend to let the dollar-a-pound monopoly come back, as far as he is concerned. He has bought tens of thousands of acres in Liberia, where rubber, which we do not grow in this country, can be produced for three cents a pound, and there in Africa no Asiatic war could disturb production.

Next came a visit to the hangar in which Mr. P. W. Litchfield of the Goodyear Co. is building a giant airship for the United States navy.

That sister ship of the Akron is now in the skeleton stage, with round ribs and a backbone of glistening white duralumin, 700 feet long, more than 300 feet wide. Eight engines of 4400 horsepower will drive it 80 miles an hour.

A man standing beneath that ship's skeleton looks like an ant gnawing at an elephant. It is actually something that must be seen. Words cannot possibly describe it.

The important fact for Americans is, first, that such a ship, sustained by five million cubic yards of helium, able to stay in the air a week or more with its engines stopped, could carry passengers and mail across the Atlantic ocean and back, making the round trip in four days.

The second important fact is that private enterprise, asking no financial help from unpassed government, will build such a ship for mail and passengers, bigger even than the Akron, if the government treating that airship like any water surface ship, will give it the mail-carrying privileges.

It is inconceivable that this should be refused. The possibility of sending salesmen, samples and mail of all kinds across the ocean, in two days, would have a value incalculable.

This particular airship, which will be ready for work within a year, will be sent to the Pacific

Wells Drop-Kicks From the 22-Yard Line as Period Ends, Giving Harvard Lead

By BILL GRIMES

Harvard Stadium, Oct. 22—Wells' field goal in the second period gave Harvard a 3-to-0 lead over Dartmouth at the half in today's furious battle here.

The two teams met under ideal weather conditions in their 39th football encounter.

The field of combat was dry and fast, which was considered favorable to Dartmouth, with its new shift which cannot operate successfully under other than perfect conditions.

Although the sky was exceptionally high, being absolutely cloudless, which was expected to prove troublesome to the safety men catching punts, the wind was of only moderate velocity and blowing from the west.

FISHMAN SPRINTS 28 YARDS

Before a crowd of approximately 30,000, Denny Wells kicked off to Hedges, who got back 12 yards. After only one running play, which picked up one yard, Dartmouth sent Fishman around Capt. Hageman for a 28-yard advance which gave Dartmouth a first down on Harvard's 43-yard line.

Although Dartmouth opened up its offense, it was unable to gain, forcing Morton to punt. Crickard, the receiver, was brought down on his own 39-yard line by Embry.

Crickard and Nevis found holes in the center of the Dartmouth line and picked up eight yards and then kicked to Fishman. He was nailed in his tracks by Hageman and Nazro.

Ike Powers gave the Dartmouth stands another chance to cheer when he went around Nazro for nine yards. Then Morton went through for a first down on Harvard's 47-yard line. Dartmouth picked up another first down on a slant tackle play by Powers and a

ARMY MARCHES ON ELI YALE

Yale Bowl, New Haven, Ct., Oct. 22—Yale and the Army, perennial rivals, ancient friends, met in their annual classic before 50,000 people this afternoon.

It remained a classic of the gridiron, although the Army came in a loser against Pitt last Saturday, and Yale is yet to win against anybody, the answer being that today's affair is a spectacle first and a football game afterward.

FIRST PERIOD

Yale lost a brilliant chance early in the first quarter as Dud Parker's punt carried and rolled 62 yards to Army's 15-yard line and forced Ken Fields to punt back short to midfield. Parker slashed through tackle for five and Bob Leaitter ripped the line for seven but passes failed and the Yale thrust ended as Parker was forced

HOOVER ASKS CO-OPERATIVE COAL MARKET LAW

THOUSANDS HAIL PRESIDENT IN CHARLESTON, W. VA.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Enroute to Detroit With President Hoover, Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 22 (INS)—A change in laws that will permit "co-operative marketing" of coal was advocated by President Hoover today as he campaigned through one of the greatest coal regions in the country.

Mr. Hoover came into West Virginia preaching protective tariff, which, he charged, the Democrats propose to destroy. On his part, he said, he proposed to maintain it.

21 GUN SALUTE

A crowd of thousands greeted the President in Charleston. From his special train, he was escorted to the Laidley stadium, a stone's throw from the station.

National guardsmen fired a 21 gun salute in honor of the first president to visit the state's capital since Andrew Jackson, 100 years ago.

After reaffirming his intention of supporting the existing tariff law to the utmost, the President plunged into the coal question, a sore one with the people of his state, scene of many mine wars.

AUDIENCE OVER 15,000

Between 15,000 and 20,000 people were packed in the stadium. They filled the seats and were packed on the playing field.

Mr. Hoover commented on the fact that so many people would come out so early in the morning.

"I recognize," he said, "that this is a demonstration, such as has been shown to no public man in years."

Through the first part of the President's speech dealing with the tariff, the throng listened with only occasional applause. But when he reached that part dealing with coal there was a rousing cheer. Coal means much to the prosperity of West Virginia.

MARKETING PLAN URGED

He said that in the past he had suggested some measure of co-operation in the market of coal because he was impressed by warnings of destruction of national resources and impoverishment of labor through destructive competition.

"Neither you nor I wish to destroy the fundamental basis of competition in our country," the President said. "But a limited co-operation to prevent this destructive action should be undertaken. We have already extended this privilege to your agriculture and labor. The coal industry could have such safeguards as would make it possible to pay a fair wage, earn reasonable profit and save hundreds of communities from their steady degeneration and impoverishment."

HIS OWN MINING WORK

"I know the hardships that have been piled upon this industry, and the men engaged in it.

"A large part of my life was concerned with the mining industry. I have worked with a pick and shovel at the face. I have managed coal mines on a large scale. I am interested in the restoration of that industry as every man is interested in the welfare of an industry in which his own profession is involved.

"The coal we use in steel, chemicals and manufactured articles is itself dependent on the tariff for without the tariff on those goods there would be no demand from those manufacturers for coal. Therefore the future of the coal industry is tied up with the maintenance of an adequate protective tariff on industry, for which we stand.

SHUT OUT FOREIGN OIL

"In order to protect the industry and the labor engaged therein from the competition of foreign oil, I co-operated with the senator from your state (Hatfield) and others in securing an excise tax on the importation of foreign oils produced by cheap labor and transported here as a substitute fuel.

"Four years ago, I directed measures to be made of the cost of living amongst workers in foreign countries using as a common denominator the bread and butter that could be purchased at retail with a workman's wages in each country.

"I found that in the highest wage countries, they could purchase about one-half as much bread and butter with current wages as could be purchased by the workman in the United States in comparable jobs, and I found that in the countries of lowest wages, they could purchase with their wages about one-third of the amount of bread and butter that could be purchased by the American workman.

"Recently, I had this situation re-surveyed in the terms of depreciated currencies. I found that in the highest paid countries, instead of being able to purchase one-half as much bread and butter as an American workman, they could only purchase one-thing as much, and in the countries of lowest standards of living, instead of purchasing one-third as much, they could only purchase one-eighth as much.

"In the fact of this, the Democratic party promises to reduce your tariffs. In the face of this, I have asked the tariff commission to re-investigate the whole rates on many commodities to see whether the tariff is giving the protection provided in the law."

SEES BETTER TIMES

"Tonight, I shall have opportunity in Detroit to speak at length upon the measures which we have inaugurated for overcoming the present national emergency. I am in hopes that many of you may have opportunity to listen to that address. I am glad to inform you that the country is declining to right itself and shows improvement in every quarter.

"I wish to thank you for the magnificent reception you have given me on this occasion. It is heartening, and is evidence that the country has an understanding of the problems before it and will support the Republican party on November 8."

DETROIT VISIT BRIEF

The President will arrive in Detroit tonight only half an hour before he is to speak. There will be no street parade. He will motor directly to Olympia Hall, and upon conclusion of his speech will return immediately to the train for the trip back to Washington, where he will be due Sunday afternoon. He will be in Detroit less than three hours.

In the party, besides Mr. and Mrs. Hoover, were Postmaster-General Walter F. Brown, assistant Secretary of the Treasury Arthur R. Heath, a native of Detroit; all three White House secretaries; Dr. Joel T. Boone, secret service men, newspaper correspondents and photographers.

ROOSEVELT RIDDLES HOOVER ALIBI ON SLUMP CAUSE

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 22 (INS)—Kentucky gave Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Democratic presidential nominee, an old-fashioned southern welcome when his special train arrived today from St. Louis.

Crowds packed the city's main business section and cheered Democracy's national standard bearer to the echo as he was escorted to the armory.

Gov. Roosevelt brought his campaign into Kentucky with a solemn pledge that Democratic victory in the November election will restore prosperity "to all the people in all parts of the country."

20,000 IN GREETING

A crowd of 20,000 jammed the Armory to capacity, and gave Gov. Roosevelt a rousing welcome. He was introduced by Gov. Ruby Laffoon of Kentucky as "Your hero and our next President."

"This is not the first time we have had a depression under the Republicans, but the Democrats are going to put an end to it," Gov. Roosevelt said.

He declared it was a perfectly fair charge to say that when the boom started in 1927, the Hoover administration took no steps to prevent it from going on upwards.

"When the crash came," he said, "the Republican leaders attempted to minimize it."

"REPUBLICAN ALIBI"

He assailed the Republicans for saying that the depression was the result of foreign conditions.

"The facts do not bear out the foreign alibi offered by the Republicans in a desperate effort to stem the Democratic sweep," the governor said.

"When our boom broke in 1929, only 20 per cent of the people of the world were in depression and 80 per cent were prosperous.

"Just as soon as we went into a depression nose dive, the number of people affected rose to 45 per cent.

"Figures don't lie. They prove our charge that the depression in this country was primarily responsible for the depression in the rest of the world.

"No campaign alibis or campaign appeals for sympathy can push those facts aside.

TARIFF FINISHED JOB

"The failures of the administration to meet the realities in 1929 started this country into the depression, and the Hawley-Smoot tariff brought on a world wide calamity."

"Our fight is against a Republican leadership which has shown itself to be absolutely destructive of prosperity in America.

"Let us keep our faith, because the welfare of the country is assured if we return to the ways of sound dealing and if we stop chasing economic and political rainbows.

"Hard times have come a knocking at the door but the sun shines bright on my old Kentucky home."

Gov. Roosevelt returned to his train and resumed his trip to make a 15-minute stop at Knoxville, Tenn., at 9 o'clock tonight. Tomorrow will find him in Atlanta.

"OLD KENTUCKY HOME"

An enthusiastic crowd of 3000 greeted Gov. Roosevelt at New Albany, Ind., just across the river from Louisville, early today.

He recalled that his father, James Roosevelt, was president of the old Louisville & New Albany Railroad.

"I was here a good deal when I was a boy back in 1875 and 1880," he said. "So in a way it's like coming back home."

Smiling down at the crowd, he joked about "people out West" who tried to get him out onto the observation platform at 2 a. m. on the threat they would "vote for Hoover" and added:

"We Democrats have tried to keep our sense of humor, which more than can be said for some other people in this campaign."

Before the Governor appeared and while U. S. Sen. Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky was addressing the crowd, the train started suddenly in the direction of Louisville.

Quick orders were given and it was brought to a halt, the Governor appearing shortly after.

"I don't know how they dared to start this train before I got out here," he said. "I wouldn't have missed seeing you for the world."

Connery said in 1928 Garner got out of a sick bed to campaign for Alfred E. Smith in territory where the klan was powerful. Garner, Connery said, was threatened several times for refusing to join the organization.

2 Dying Men Found in Auto, Their Faces Badly Burned

Two dying men, carried 45 miles by automobile from Falls River, were found in the South End early today as companions calmly sought aid from an Arlington square doctor.

The sister of one and two men companions gave police a variety of stories on the manner in which the dying men were burned on their faces.

A weird scene confronted Patrolmen Walter Sullivan and John Miller of the East Dedham street station when they investigated an unlighted sedan in Arlington sq., outside the doctor's office.

Miss Mary Haggar, 35, of Harrison st., Fall River, was on the front seat of the car.

UNABLE TO EXPLAIN

Her brother, Richard, 30, of Flint st., Fall River, and Joseph Ashook 32, of Sanford rd., Westport, were in a semi-coma in the rear.

The odor of burned flesh attracted the officers to the burned men but Miss Haggar told them she was unable to explain the burns. She said two men were arousing a doctor.

The two, Elias Ashook, 32, brother of one victim, and Charles Augier, 31, of Transit st., Providence, suddenly appeared and refused to talk to the officers

The wounded men were taken to City Hospital in the same car and the names of both were placed on the danger list.

STORIES CONFLICT

Miss Haggar told police her brother and Ashook had been sprayed with oil by two men who afterwards set them afire. Her brother, in the hospital, denied her story, saying he was burned in an explosion in a Fall River house.

Miss Sophie Kalis of Sanford rd., Westport, to whom the sedan was registered, was questioned by police and said Ashook took her car last Friday with the announcement doing," she said, according to police. "Let me out of here; oh, let me go!"

In spite of a police broadcast, Miss Murray was home and calmly dressing for bed when Sergt. Frank Raymond and Patrolmen Ravery, Ables and Donlon of Burlington police knocked at the door of the apartment building she owns.

"You have been accused in Brookline, Mass., of assault upon your aunt," Sergt. Raymond said.

"That's right, I am," police said Miss Murray replied.

In effect, the story Miss Murray told police agreed with that told by Miss Stone.

The aunt and niece met for the first time in two years when Miss Murray called at Brookline Thursday morning.

"I went to the Massachusetts General Hospital to be treated for deafness and doctors there told me I would have to have apparatus that cost $50," Miss Murray was quoted by Burlington police.

"Although I own my house and rent rooms, Baldwin has been bad and I didn't have that much money. I went to my aunt and asked her for it but she would not give it to me.

"All day yesterday I pleaded with her and last night we came to an argument and I must have lost my head.

Miss Stone said the attack was unexpected. Her niece, she told Sergt. Donovan, had argued with her about money but had been refused.

"We had supper and had started to drive home when I noticed we were going in the wrong direction. My niece, however, explained that she wanted to show me something.

"She stopped in Harvard ave., and went to the rumble seat of her car. When she returned, she placed a cloth over my mouth and I started to feel faint.

"When I fought with her she hit me with the jack and I don't remember much after that."

Oggie is afraid that a Democratic victory will wash up the works. He predicts disaster in sepulchral tones and winds up his speech with three hearty groans for the future.

If Oggie wants to get a real gloomy outlook on things we advise him to pull a rubber boot over his head and fly blind like an aviator in a fog.

Oggie is laying on the gloom thicker than ketchup on a lunch wagon steak. Even at his most optimistic tempo there is brimstone in his salt shaker and sulphur in the pepper.

"Stand back, ladies and gentlemen, and have no fear. That drowning dog will soon be rescued," was the gentle command of a squad of Metropolitan police.

The crowd, with bated breath, watched a brave fire laddie crawl out on a ladder to a point in the bolling. Then where a dog should be, object was bobbing up and down in the river.

BANK SEIZES COOK'S HOME

For the third time in two years, former State Auditor Alonzo B. Cook lost a home today through mortgage foreclosure sale. Cook is Republican candidate for auditor at the coming election.

Today's sale, on foreclosure of a $4000 first mortgage held by the Cohasset Savings Bank of Cohasset, and a second mortgage of $500, took from him a house in Indian rd., Scituate.

According to officials of the bank, interest on the mortgages for the past two years has been unpaid as well as two years' taxes. The property was foreclosed nearly two months ago, with no effort to recover it made on a then.

Two years ago, a $4500 house owned by Cook in Winslow st., Dorchester, was foreclosed and later sold by the Inman Trust Co. of Cambridge. A short time later, a house in Capt. Pierce rd., Scituate, owned by Cook and valued at about $5000, was foreclosed and sold for the mortgage by the Rockland Trust Co.

200 PRISONERS IN RIOT; 1 DEAD

New York, Oct. 22 (AP)—One prisoner was killed and many were injured today in rioting at the city penitentiary on Welfare Island which started among prison "peace-makers" in the warden's office.

Two committees of peace-makers had met to settle racial animosities between Irish and Italian prisoners.

The peace-makers suddenly began fighting and George Holshod was stabbed to death. The killing was the signal for general rioting which spread among 200 prisoners.

The rioting continued for half an hour before it was quelled. Many were injured.

Between 600 and 800 policemen, emergency squads, police boats and reserves were rushed to the scene, equipped with machine guns, rifles, revolvers and tear gas bombs.

The peace committees consisted of two men each. Holshod, the man killed, was a representative of the Irish prisoners.

There are 1660 inmates. The hundreds in their cells began screaming and shaking the bars and for an hour there was bedlam.

After the riot prisoners seemed in an ugly mood and more than 100 patrolmen were held ready with revolvers, rifles and gas bombs.

Police boats continued to circle the island and planes to wheel close overhead.

coast probably, and there will represent the United States Navy well.

You see in the skeleton framework the apparatus to which swift heavier-than-air pursuit planes will be attached, to be launched in time of need. They will bring back news of the enemy to the mother ship and perhaps drop a small consignment of high explosives or destructive gas to clear decks and wipe out gunners or enemy floating ships.

This city, great in industry, for nearly one century is no greater than ever today and admirable in civic energy.

Its airport, one of the finest in the United States, sets a good example to the other countries.

Its streets are wide. Its citizenship, that has excelled in industry and perfected production machinery for so long, has surpassed itself in the development of the rubber industry, which is its latest achievement.

All the tire factories in all the world, outside of Akron, could not possibly produce one-half the number of tires that can be made here.

Whoever sees the high state of perfection to which the production of life's necessities has been brought, here and in Detroit, and in Cleveland, next door, cannot doubt the ultimate limitless prosperity of this country, despite occasional setbacks caused by the stupidity of international war and of individual selfishness.

2 GANGSTERS IN BOSTON TO KILL RUM BANDITS

Victims Marked to Die, Police Learn as They Press War on Kidnaping Ring

Two imported gunmen, one from New York and the other from N. J. Jersey, were taken into East Boston today to deal out death to two East Boston men who held up a speakeasy.

This, in the face of a police drive against gangster haunts, sent detectives into that section with orders to rout the gunmen and close dives that might harbor them.

One of the East Boston men "spotted" is a brother-in-law of a North End gangster, police revealed. Throughout the underworld he and a companion are accused of holding up a speakeasy in Liverpool st., East Boston.

Reports of gangster activities, ordered as a result of the Herman Rutstein kidnaping, also revealed that a nationally known underworld character has left downtown headquarters and is about to take over a South End hotel that recently was remodelled.

WANTS LIFE PENALTY

Further than that, the top floor of the hotel has been elaborately fitted as a night club and, within the week, a grand opening was held.

Police Capt. John M. Anderson, placed in charge of the gangster drive and a gathering in of "Who's Who in Gangdom," plans to ask Dist. Atty. William J. Foley for life sentences in the Rutstein kidnap case.

Capt. Anderson's move is part of a plan to break up the ring suspected of other kidnapings besides that of Rutstein. The maximum sentence would serve as a warning to others who contemplated this crime, Anderson said.

Police are continuing their hunt for Maurice Cohen, of Columbia rd., in connection with the kidnaping. The finding of a bloodstained mat in an auto, registered under a fictitious name at his address, led to the belief he might have been slain to silence him.

Police are maintaining a constant guard over Rutstein, whom they describe as in terror of his life. He is chief witness against the three men in custody and fears attempts will be made to put him out of the way.

HOME UNDER GUARD

Rutstein's brother, Samuel Rutstein, of Newton, has hired a private bodyguard and his home is also under guard. He told police he had received death threats in the past few days.

The police checkup in the underworld will result in listing of all known gunmen, thieves and gangsters. The drive is concentrated on speakeasies in and around the city as the recognized haunts of the underworld denizens. All route officers were working on this listing last night and today.

To provide a double check on the listing, Deputy Superintendent James McDevitt, head of the bureau of criminal investigation, has ordered his plain clothesmen to perform the same task.

FERGUSON LETS HER KEEP SON PENDING SUIT

Waban Man Persues Mate and Child Across Continent; Policeman Halts Battle

Pursuit that began in August and continued across the continent, culminated early today when Scott D. Ferguson of Waban, State st. attorney, engaged in a street battle in Oakland, Cal., with his estranged wife over possession of their 5-year-old son, Scott D. Ferguson, Jr.

According to dispatches from Oakland, a traffic officer was attracted to a taxicab and found the Boston couple battling over possession of a boy, who Ferguson charged, was abducted last April by the mother, after a Middlesex Probate Court had given custody to him.

Traffic Officer Wasarhaley took the couple and the boy to police headquarters, where attorneys were called. After a consultation, Ferguson agreed that his wife, against whom he had instituted a divorce action in Middlesex County, should keep possession of the boy, pending a later conference.

Mrs. Ferguson charged her husband had attempted to snatch the boy from her and flee in the taxicab.

Ferguson told police that last August, pending trial of a divorce suit, he was given custody.

On August 24, the boy vanished from his father's home in Pine Ridge rd., Waban, and Ferguson got a warrant charging his wife with kidnaping.

BETTE DAVIS TO GO UNDER KNIFE

Stricken with appendicitis while she worked on a movie set Bette Davis, Boston girl, was rushed to a Hollywood hospital and will go under the knife there today.

The sudden attack came to the young star late yesterday as the cameras ground on the set on which she was working. As she went through her role she was suddenly seized with the attack and collapsed.

Studio workers rushed to her aid and hurriedly summoned physicians advised her immediate removal to the hospital. On arrival there she was examined and physicians stated she was suffering from appendicitis.

Miss Davis was born in this city and is the daughter of Mrs. Ruth F. Davis of Lowell. Her father died several years ago. She was educated in the Lowell schools and at Cushing Academy, Ashburnham.

PANE CRASHERS GET $200 GEMS

A band of daring window thieves, outwitting eight plain clothesmen and police officers in two squad cars, hurled a rock through a Washington st. window of the Ellis jewelry store today and escaped with $200 of jewelry.

This is the third such robbery in the downtown area in the last two weeks.

Capt. Martin King of the Milk st. station had given the plain clothesmen special instructions to watch jewelry stores, but the thieves, evidently well acquainted with the movements of the officers, timed their break perfectly.

On Wednesday of this week $9600 in diamond rings was stolen from Smith Patterson Co. window in a similar break.

Man 'Too Big for His Job' Is Weighty Waltham Problem

By WIN BROOKS

And here, brother professors, we have a very weighty problem. Kindly comb the sandman out of your whiskers and pay attention.

Now then, gentlemen, we have two figures in the picture and reading from left to right they are as follows:

Left: Frederick A. Malone, standing 5 feet 7 inches in his bare tootsie-wooties and weighing 172 pounds, avoirdupois system, which is how you buy your potatoes.

Right: Joseph T. Mulcahey, standing 5 feet 11 inches in his naked dogs and weighing 394 pounds.

You are mistaken, professor, there is no third figure. That is all, Mr. Mulcahey.

The problem, gentlemen of the faculty, is whether Mr. Malone or Mr. Mulcahey shall be director of public welfare in Waltham and at this writing the odds are all on Mr. Malone.

Weighty Problem

Yet it is a problem of some considerable heft as I said at the outset—the left being 394 pounds to be exact, and those belonging to Mr. Mulcahey to be specific—and there is a chance that Mr. Mulcahey will triumph over Mr. Malone.

The chance lies in the possibility that the city council may reject Mr. Malone's appointment and in the possibility that the Civil Service Commission will next Wednesday retract its decision that Mr. Mulcahey is too big a man for the job.

The background is very interesting. Mr. Mulcahey has been the acting director of the department since Dr. F. A. MacDonald, director, had a little difference of opinion with Mayor Dunne some months ago.

Since this regrettable imbroglio which resulted in the good doctor's resignation before the mayor could suspend him, Mr. Mulcahey has done an exceptionally fine job of directing the city welfare department. He has fed the poor and cared for the impoverished sick, and when anybody asks, "What's the matter with Mulcahey?" the loud and general chorus is, "He's all right."

And to be sure he is all right. Only the Civil Service says he's too fat.

The appointment of a regular director had to be made according to Civil Service and that is where Mr. Malone entered. Mr. Malone entered and passed the test with flying colors. Then the Civil Service decided Mr. Mulcahey was too big a man for the job, and his name wasn't even on the list submitted to the mayor.

Style to His Fat

So Mayor Duane appointed Mr. Malone and he was confirmed by the Civil Service Commission after a little difficulty over complaints that Mr. Malone, back in 1923, had been arrested for being drunk. This was ironed out after sober consideration, and the city council's endorsement is now all that is needed to put Mr. Malone in Mr. Mulcahy's big chair.

Off-hand, like you'd draw to a middle straight, you'd naturally think that a good-natured, well-fed man like Mr. Mulcahey would make a pretty good welfare director and it's hard to see why he wouldn't be a good one because he's a stylish stout or, let us say, an ultra-fashionable stout.

Mr. Mulcahey, as the name implies, does not flee the scene of combat without putting up a remarkably able fight, so he has petitioned for, and been allowed, a hearing next Wednesday to prove to the Civil Service commissioners they were all wrong.

Won't Wreck Joint

Just how he will go about this he isn't sure, but he is not listening to any suggestions that he "wreck the joint" (meaning the Civil Service headquarters) as proof of his stability.

"It's all very unpleasant," said Mr. Mulcahey. "It's all on account of the avoirdupois, of course. But I was always fat, I've always had it. I'm 38 but I can still play football just as good as I did for Waltham in the days when Nate Tufts was coach. I'll be up there Wednesday."

Should the council reject Malone and should the Civil Service restore Mulcahey, Mayor Dunne will, he has indicated, appoint Mulcahey. But, as I said at the beginning, gentlemen, it's a very weighty problem.

Winooski, Vt., Oct. 22 (AP)—Mrs. Manuel Aguilar returned today, saying she had been beaten, robbed and held a prisoner for 14 hours. She attributed her plight to a former inmate of the state prison whom she had befriended. Mrs. Aguilar said she received a telephone call yesterday asking that she do an errand. One of them struck her on the head and she remembered no more until 5:30 o'clock this morning when she escaped from the house and hitch hiked back home.

ENSIGN TELLS OF LOVE THEFT

Ensign Henry A. Tyburc of the Naval Reserve, formerly of Salem, in New York today told the story of his blighted love which led him to sue his former friend, Malcolm Stone, and the latter's father, Dr. A. K. Stone of Framingham, for $100,000.

Ensign Tyburc's wife divorced him in Reno and married young Stone, a trumpeter in a popular New York orchestra.

"We were happily married for nearly 10 years," said Tyburc. "My wife was Meta Rogers King, a Richmond (Va.) belle and winner of several beauty contests.

"I left the navy and took a job in New York, but she said she was bored being alone all day and took a position as a phone operator. I soon noticed she was very friendly with my friend, Malcolm Stone.

"'I found out things, but did nothing, and then she suddenly went to Reno. While there she had the nerve to write my sister:

"'I made Henry's life a living hell. My heavens! That poor boy was nagged to death. Any other man would have brained me.'"

Tyburc whose parents live in Derby st., Salem, made a spirited contest of the divorce suit, but lost, and soon afterward his former wife and Stone were married in Reno.

2 MILTON POLICE SUSPENDED

It is also charged that Callahan was intoxicated, gave a wrong name and used indecent language. Dalton is charged with driving under the influence and giving a wrong name.

MAYNARD SEES ROOSEVELT BY 200,000

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

Chairman Joseph A. Maynard of the Democratic State Committee today took issue with the hopeful indications for the Hoover-Curtis ticket held out to the "pessimistic" men leaders of the G. O. P. by Mrs. Frank Roe Batchelder, Republican national committeewoman.

Pointing to the figures of the Literary Digest poll, Maynard said that in the shift of votes, both Republicans and Democrats, from four years ago, Governor Roosevelt is making a net gain of 24 per cent.

"On that basis," he declared, "Roosevelt would carry Massachusetts by 200,000."

AN AVALANCHE

And in rebuttal to Mrs. Batchelder's argument that figures based on telephone lists failed to reach the women, who she claimed are the strongest supporters of the President, Maynard commented:

"If these straw votes are escaping any class of persons it is the ones, who, by reason of hardships of the past few years have been obliged to change their methods of living and places of abode. These people are for Roosevelt."

Continuing, Chairman Maynard said:

"No wonder that Mrs. Batchelder says she finds the Republican men leaders lying down on the job, ready to quit the fight. It is not a fight, it is an avalanche."

Maynard further declared that the record registration of voters is largely Democratic.

ELY STANDS BY STATE RECORD ON BANKS

The campaign issue of expenses of liquidating the closed banks of Massachusetts was threshed out in detail by Gov. Ely and his Republican opponent for the governorship, William S. Youngman, in separate radio speeches last night.

Gov. Ely declared that the closed institutions are being liquidated at a cost of 1 per cent of the deposits involved, that this cost is much lower than that of either federal liquidation or state liquidations made previously under Republican administrations.

On the other hand, Youngman contended that the item of "total expense to date" is deceptive because "four of the liquidators have not yet received a dollar of compensation."

Gov. Ely held that an attack upon the liquidating agents is an attack upon Bank Commissioner Arthur Guy and upon Henry H. Pierce, a Republican and former vice-president of the First National Bank of Boston "whom we have placed in direct supervision of all liquidations and reorganizations."

However, the Governor held that the question is not whether they are Republicans or Democrats, but are they capable.

TAUNTON YOUTH SHOT; FATHER IS HELD

Taunton, Oct. 22—Francis J. Guinard, 22, was shot above the heart and seriously wounded today, and his father, Harry, 47, was held as a suspicious person, despite his story of a gun battle between his son and two prowlers.

The son was shot in a camp on Lake View st., at 5 o'clock this morning, after spending the night there with his father.

The elder Guinard told Police Chief John P. Duffy that his son fired two shots from a .22 caliber rifle at two prowlers who refused to obey an order to leave the premises.

He said the son fired through an open window and the prowlers fired an answering shot which wounded the youth. Guinard said he went to a neighbor's and called police.

Police questioned the father's story, as only one bullet hole was found in a screen on the window through which three shots were fired. And that hole was made by a bullet fired from within the camp.

The bullet which struck young Guinard was of .38 caliber. It took a downward course after entering his chest, emerging near the spine.

Dr. Swift, who examined young Guinard at Morton hospital, also found what he believed to be powder marks near the wound.

Albert Beauvais, owner of the camp, said he was there last night, but that there was no party or other reason he knew of which would have led to shooting.

The elder Guinard, police revealed, has been in court several times on liquor and non-support charges.

'Tough Guy' in Battle With Antelope

The author tells in this installment how the midget buffalo attacked and killed a big buck antelope but was thoroughly cowed by a harmless porcupine.

Shortly after my return to Singapore I turned Little Tough Guy, our rarin', tearin', midget buffalo, loose in a fenced enclosure at the compound that I used for grazing bovines, antelopes, deer and other grass-eating animals—a piece of ground covering about four acres. Then I did a job of lassoing on him. I got two separate nooses around his neck, three boys grabbing one rope and three grabbing the other.

Each gang pulled its rope out straight until it was held taut at right angles with the animal's body. The two ropes, stretched out in one long line, prevented him from charging at anyone and enabled the boys to walk him up and down the lot. The idea was to show him who was boss and to tame him down sufficiently so that he could be led out into this enclosure from his stall without a riot resulting each morning.

These boys succeeded only for a short time in manipulating Little Tough Guy in this fashion. Inside of 15 minutes he was dragging all six of them all over the lot. It finally took 10 boys weighing altogether about 1200 pounds to hold his mere 200 pounds of bristling muscle.

"Tough Guy" Looks For Fight

After working with him for about two weeks we got Little Tough Guy to the point where he would submit—not too graciously—to being led out of his stall. This was not a regular box stall, but one that was merely marked off by a few stout bamboo poles.

In one of the adjoining stalls I had a full-grown Indian nilgai buck, a fine specimen of this largest of all Asiatic antelope. Little Tough Guy decided he didn't like this animal who, with its doe, shared the fenced-in grazing ground with him. Or perhaps my Celebes roughneck resented the fact that the antelope were permitted to roam at will while he, Little Tough Guy, was tied with a heavy rope to a stake.

At any rate, more than once L. T. G., on being led out, would lower his head as he passed the buck and, edging over, try to get at him in the manner of a scrappy bantam cock looking for a fight. This got to be such a habit with L. T. G. that we had to make a practice of leading out the buck and his doe first.

My rowdy from Celebes was certainly willing to concede plenty of height and weight to the antelope, for this nilgai, in addition to towering over him—it stood five feet at the shoulder mark—weighed about 250 pounds. Little Tough Guy poised himself ludicrous beside him, almost giving the impression that he could walk right under the nilgai's belly.

"L. T. G." Attacks Antelope

The buck and doe discreetly kept their distance. They remained as far away from where Little Tough Guy was tied as the fences of the compound permitted. This did not prevent L. T. G. from eyeing them wrathfully by the hour and snorting his disdain at regular intervals.

One day as I was working around the compound I heard one of the boys frantically call me. Waving me toward the enclosure, he breathlessly shouted that the anoa had snapped his rope and was attacking the buck.

I made for the lot on the run and arrived in time to see the pygmy buffalo, head lowered, lunge at the antelope, which prepared, like the capable fighter he is when aroused, to meet the charge face to face. The anoa, to avoid the nilgai's formidable horns, swerved to one side and, hitting the buck amidships with a tremendous butt, raised it right off the ground. These strangely contrasting combatants were at the far end of the lot. As I made for the scene (yelling to the boys to join me in the fray) the pygmy buffalo, like a scrappy bantam cock looking for a fight. This got to be such a habit with L. T. G. that we had to make a practice of leading out the buck and his doe first.

These strangely contrasting combatants were at the far end of the lot. As I made for the scene (yelling to the boys to join me in the fray) the pygmy buffalo poised himself for another assault.

The nilgai, in self-defense, prepared to do a little charging himself. It looked like a head-on collision between a big freight locomotive and a narrow-gauge switch engine. But the anoa swerved adroitly to one side as before, again striking the foe amidships, but this time with terrific force. His horns buried themselves in the antelope's belly.

Then I witnessed one of the strangest sights of my whole career. The anoa, with the buck impaled on his horns, lifted the enemy straight upward—an almost incredible performance for so small an animal—and then shook himself free from his burden.

The antelope—while the cowering doe looked on—hit the ground like a sack of cement and stayed there, moaning. His belly ripped wide open, he lay gasping his last. Yet the anoa—battle-crazed—was all for making another charge by way of giving the thing finality. I came up in time to prevent this last brutal assault. With the aid of several boys I managed to get a new rope over the anoa's horns and we finally got the bantam-weight champion of the animal world back in his stall.

"Porky" Puts Fear In "L. T. G."

All my head Malay boy who was second in command at the compound, always suspected that one of the boys, anxious to see the anoa attack the antelope, had severed the rope—or weakened it. And all may have been right. For it is hard to believe that even so powerful an animal as that ornery anoa could have snapped a rope as stout as the one he used in tying him to the stake.

Ironically enough, a few days later I found Little Tough Guy cringing in a corner of his stall in abject terror. Not many yards away there was an open crate in which I had housed a porcupine. This harmless little fellow—he weighed exactly seven pounds—was rattling his quills in the manner characteristic of his species. L. T. G. trembled all over his legs positively shaking as the porcupine went through these innocent maneuvers. The anoa was struggling to get as far away as possible from the placid little creature that so obviously filled him with fright.

This gave me an idea. Thereafter whenever Little Tough Guy got tough I placed a porcupine near him. Almost instantaneously I would get results, whether there was any rattling of quills or not. For L. T. G., who had vanquished a buck antelope nearly twice his own weight, was scared to death of anything that looked like a porcupine. I could have frightened him with a handful of quills stuck in a sponge.

Some months later I delivered Little Tough Guy and his female companion to Dr. Hornaday, who was delighted with having the first anoas ever seen alive in America.

I was glad to please the noted director of the New York Zoological Park, but I secretly vowed never to handle another of those pesky creatures. I changed my mind, however, when Dr. Penrose, then head of the Philadelphia Zoo, decided that he also wanted a pair. I couldn't turn down so good a friend. The following year Dr. Penrose had his anoas. A calf was born to the female en route—and this I sold to Dr. Hornaday.

The only anoas ever seen in America besides those five are their descendants—and there haven't been many of them.

LINEN, FOOD IN CHURCH ROBBED

A safe robbery in a confectionery plant and the theft of dishes, linen and food from a church vestry were reported to Cambridge police today as having occurred some time during the night.

In the office of the Kendall Confectionery Co., in Main st., Cambridge, safe breakers hammered open a safe and stole $100 in cash, after entering the plant by forcing a rear door.

Rev. A. A. Graham, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church at 1418 Cambridge st., reported that a burglar entered through a window and stole from the church vestry 12 dozen knives, forks and spoons, a set of dishes, table cloths, two cameras and a quantity of foodstuffs.

JEWISH FUND IS NEAR $300,000

Campaign workers in the Associated Jewish Philanthropies resumed their work today with renewed vigor, determined to swell their total to $300,000 before Monday, the opening day of their second week of canvassing.

Reports yesterday noon swelled the total collected or pledged to $280,418. With the remainder of the day, all day today and tomorrow, drive leaders are confident that the next report meeting, to be held Monday noon, will show the fund has passed the halfway mark.

The day's total reported for yesterday slumped below the figure of the previous day with a sum of $12,369 added to the drive fund. Campaign leaders indicated that they were not discouraged at this and pointed out that it was merely a reflection of how much the bad weather had hampered the drive workers.

YOUNGMAN PLEA IN CHAIN LETTER

The breakfast table hour, for those who do not go to work too early, was warmed up with a bit of heart-throb today when toast and coffee consumers received a "man-to-man" message from Lieutenant-Governor William S. Youngman, on the Commonwealth's stationery, appealing for the chain-letter vote.

Appended to the letters was the signatures of Youngman Republican candidate for governor, and each of the letters said:

"Dear Friend—You did a great job in the primaries for the Youngman cause. Now let's finish the job up right!

"We have the advantage of a worthy cause. If the voters understood the real situation at the State House, a victorious outcome would not even be open to question. Even ignoring the tremendous waste of money for the benefit of private interests, the pardons of scores of criminals and the paid appointments to office by the present governor, his rate of spending money is nothing short of appalling.

"Will you do this for me: every day between now and election day, Nov. 8, speak or telephone to 10 of your friends and tell them to vote for Youngman for governor. If they are willing, ask them to do the same and tell them why.

"One more thing: sit down now and write a letter to the editor of your newspaper, telling him what you thought of my latest radio speech."

(Reporter's note: "I didn't think it was so hot.")

GUSTIN LEADER HELD IN FIGHT

Steve Wallace, leader of the Gustin gang and two other men were arrested today while a crowd of 500 looked on, following a riotous disturbance around the gas station and dining car of Jim Maloney, former heavyweight fighter, at Dorchester st. and Old Colony ave., South Boston.

The other two men gave their names as Frank Buckley and Frank Sweeney. All were charged with taking part in an affray.

Steve Wallace is a brother of Frank Wallace, former Gustin gang chief, who was slain in Hanover st., North End, with Bernard (Dodo) Walsh last year.

Police say several members of the Gustin gang invaded Maloney's dining car early this afternoon, only to be driven out by a barrage of Maloney fists, two being knocked down in the brief but torrid scuffle.

They returned later, however, according to the police, and set upon Maloney and theirs, the police reserves being called and the big crowd of spectators gathering.

Police assert that the feud between Maloney and the gang is of long standing. Recently the gang smashed windows and Maloney engaged the services of half a dozen North End guards.

Feeling between the Gustins and North End gangsters has been at fever point ever since the slaying of Frankie Wallace.

Maloney refused to fire the guards, according to police, and today's fracas was the result.

DRIVER RESCUED FROM HORSES

Michael Murray, 45, of 5 Glen pl., Jamaica Plain, a Boston Park Department driver, was saved from death today when a son-in-law of former Lieut.-Gov. Edward P. Barry leaped to the heads of two runaway horses and jerked them away from the prostrate form of the man they were trampling.

The horses, attached to a Park Department wagon, bolted at Walnut ave. and Sigourney st., Jamaica Plain, and raced toward Glen rd. The driver was thrown off in front of the Barry home at 32 Sigourney st.

As Maguire ran out of the house the horses, halted when Murray became entangled in the harness, were trampling him.

Maguire diverted the animals to a stone wall in front of the adjoining house. One of the horses was badly cut as he hit the wall.

The unconscious driver was taken to City Hospital in Jamaica Plain police ambulance and his name was placed on the danger list. He suffered internal injuries and multiple cuts and bruises.

United Fruit Line Charters 3 Ships

United Fruit company officials today announced the chartering of three of their ships—the Cartago, Parismina and Heredia, all fully refrigerated, to the States Steamship company of Portland, Oregon, for use in the Oriental trade. The United Fruit company has within the last year launched six fast mail steamships.

POLICY RACKET IS BARED AS 3 FACE COURT

A widespread insurance "racket," based on fake death claims, was described by State police today, following the arraignment of three former insurance agents in Woburn court.

They are Harry T. Stewart, 40, of Grove st., Wilmington; Max Davis, 37, of Phillips st., Malden, and Sigmund Bodner, 36, of Greenwood st., Dorchester.

All pleaded not guilty to charges of conspiracy to defraud an insurance company and were released in $2000 bail each for a hearing November 10.

In the meantime State Detectives O'Neil and Sherlock said the case would be presented to the Middlesex County grand jury, at which time additional charges will be preferred.

FAKE DEATH CLAIMS

According to the police, a gang operating in the northern part of Greater Boston has been mulcting insurance companies of considerable sums through fake death claims.

The Boston Evening American learned they also have been demanding one-fifth of the money which they promised to obtain for holders of lapsed policies.

In the case of Mrs. Alice Manion of Sturgis st., Woburn, which was responsible for the arrest of Stewart, Davis and Bodner, the woman says she was promised $50, with the understanding the men who got her the money would receive $10 of it.

POLICY HAD LAPSED

According to Mrs. Manion, her policy, taken out on her own life with her husband, William E. Manion, a war veteran, as beneficiary, was written nine years ago by her brother, John Loughlin of Cambridge, an agent of the insurance company.

Mrs. Manion said the policy had lapsed about a year when the men visited her. One of the men, Mrs. Manion said, gave her the card of a Boston lawyer, advising her to see him if she ever "got into any trouble."

PAULINE SHAW BRIDE OF LIEUT. PHILLIPS

SOUTHERN NAVAL MAN WINS N. E. BRIDE

LIEUT. AND MRS. NEILL PHILLIPS after their wedding today in Leslie Lindsey Memorial Chapel. The bride was Miss Pauline Shaw, daughter of the Francis Gould Shaws and a member of an old New England family. Lieut. Phillips, who is in the Navy, is from Newport, Ark. (Staff Photo.)

Lindsey Chapel Is Scene of Ceremony

A member of one of Boston's oldest families, Miss Pauline Shaw, was married at 10:30 a. m. today to Lieut. Neill Phillips, an officer in the submarine service of the United States Navy.

Owing to the illness of her future father-in-law the ceremony in the Leslie Lindsey Memorial Chapel was a small one.

The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Gould Shaw, of West Hill pl., wore a formal afternoon costume of dark green velvet with a velvet turban to match. She carried an ivory prayer book. Her only attendant, Miss Lorraine Warner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Langdon Warner of Garden st., Cambridge, selected a pink beige costume.

Mr. Shaw gave his daughter in marriage and the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Lloyd R. Gillmett, assistant rector of Emanuel Church of Cambridge. Mrs. Shaw wore a gown of fawn blue serge. The bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Samuel Robinson Phillips, of Newport, Ark., was unable to be present, her uncle Mr. Hugh Neil of New York, the vice president of the Pacific Railway, was one of the witnesses.

Lieut. Phillips had Lieut. Lawrence Freeman, U. S. N., as his best man. Among the ushers were the bride's brother, Mr. Francis G. Shaw, Jr., whose fiancee is Miss Ruth Wellington, also Miss Wellington's brother, Mr. William Wellington, Mr. Alexander Wadsworth, of Hyde Park, Mr. Robert John Bulkley, Jr., of Washington, and Cleveland, who is engaged to Miss Warner, the maid of honor.

A small reception followed at West Hill, home of the bride's parents. The couple will go on to Newport later to visit the bridegroom's parents, before returning to Portsmouth where Lieut. Phillips is stationed, and will be at home to their many friends on Dec. 1.

Archery Club Hunts Deer With Arrows

Salt Lake City, Oct. 22 (AP)—Members of the Utah Archery Club are hunting deer in the mountains near Beaver, Utah, equipped only with bows and arrows.

They are favored by a 14-inch snowfall which makes game trailing easy, but the deep flakes are a menace to the supply of arrows as once they are shot they are extremely hard to find.

Latest Notes of the Fashionables

By Dorothy Whipple Fry

Among the epidemics that have broken out in the smart world of late is the natty felt hat, the Wattsian variety that tilts down alluringly over the face, and then turns up behind in a ravishing manner. The becoming hat is the one that follows the hair line, that is if the coiffure is well cut and becoming. The woman who is considering the purchase of one of these daring hats should remember that the high fur collar is going to be most attractive building up to the hat, and the curls must be just right underneath.

One young lady who wears these smart little heritages from the old French master so cogetiently is Miss Dorothy Forbes of Wellesley. We saw her not long ago on the North Shore, wearing a "Baby Leopard" coat, quite long and good-looking. We might add, "and then the little hat to top off the rig!" It was brown and had that coquetish dip in the front with a tip up in back, and showed her hair on all sides.

Dorothy Forbes

Another young woman who looks well in this season's creation in millinery is Miss Elizabeth Hovey. She is a member of the executive committee of the Vincent Club, and is not only smartly dressed, but is noted for her ability as an organizer. She looked well the other day at the meeting of the Vincent Club. She wore a dark green morning dress, and one of those captivating hats—not extreme, but just nicely balanced and becoming. She has an enchanting smile.

Another young woman who is greatly in evidence today, and whose good-looks and well tailored mien are a frequent source of conversation, is Mrs. Lyon Weyburn of the North Shore, now engaged in the activities of the Junior League, of which she is regional director. She looks well in her black tailored ensemble with a narrow rim of white trimming, and a good looking black felt hat. Mrs. Weyburn has blue eyes, and wavy brown hair, lovely complexion, and a very great charm of manner as well as being a great executive.

Also prominent among the members of the Junior League is Mrs. Randolph Byers of Milton. She has blue eyes, and light brown hair—and looks well in her sporty tweeds with a brimmed sport hat.

Fire Houses to Take Red Cross Bundles

All Boston fire stations will be used as collection points for donations of clothing, canned food and vegetables for the American Red Cross. James Jackson, chairman of the metropolitan chapter, in a statement today, says the need for clothing is tremendous.

All who can are urged to bring whatever clothing or food they can to the nearest fire station at once.

Books---And a Number of Things.

By CHARLES HANSON TOWNE

The triangle story—with a new twist. The man, the central character, and his reactions to the single lady who he finds himself. The wife rather submerged, but always there, the Other Woman standing out, clear and distinct.

This is how a gentleman from Wall Street, writing his first novel, attacks a subject as old as Eve. And he goes to Ecclesiastes for his title:

"And I find more bitter than death the woman, whose heart is snares and nets, and her hands as bands."

Masterly Handling

So we have "Hands as Bands" from the pen of C. T. Revere, published by Long & Smith. And we have Justin Sherrill, a business man, going to Washington in 1917 to give his services to his country in the Treasury Department, working industriously on the Liberty Loan.

The girl, June, enters. June was merely a pet name. She was really Sylvia Wickliffe, and she was to prove the greatest thing in Sherrill's life, though he was married and had two children.

Familiar material. But one must praise Mr. Revere for his masterly handling of the old theme. His people come to life; and it is astonishing that a man who has devoted himself to the world of finance should, in ripe middle age, construct a novel so well, building up his situations expertly, fixing the framework with such skill that the structure never shakes.

Emotion is in these pages; and there are, too, as one might expect, glimpses of Wall Street, and the business, Sherrill, for all his Herculean strength is consumed and almost wrecked by the girl who becomes his mistress. He pays a price for his folly; yet while the madness possesses him he knows the only real happiness he ever finds.

And there are subsidiary characters drawn with unusual understanding: the emotionally starved Miss Gebhardt, the blackmailing Mrs. Crandall, the staunch friend, "Bull Hicks, with his lavish advice. Even the children of Sherrill step truly and tenderly upon the scene.

When the story shifts to New York and the hidden-away household is the pivot around which Sherrill's life revolves, Mr. Revere is at his brilliant best; and the gradual dissolution of his affair is handled with no little art. We get the terror and fascination of the metropolis, and see how men work and dream in the mysterious maze of the city, how the currents all but drag them down.

The Final Meeting

I like particularly the lyric ending with Sherrill's final meeting so casual so real, with the woman he loved. And here Mr. Revere bursts into a paragraph of much beauty, as his hero, somewhat tired and broken, looks from a high window at the panorama beneath him:

"He rose from his desk and looked out the thirtieth-story window. It was late on a brilliant Saturday forenoon. Far below, on the broad reaches of North River, his musing eyes ranged over a scene that always thrilled and chilled him—thrilled him by its flourish of power, chilled him by the blasoned cruelty of its cost. Out beyond the forest of jagged spires, on the shining bosom of the Hudson, scampered tugs like fowls darting about for food. A dozen ferryboats criss-crossed the gleaming surface—slow, ungainly turtles compared with the trim majesty of those two liners gliding down to the Narrows."

The motion pictures will find dialogue and action here, served up in generous fashion. It is a first novel of rich promise, full of force and fire.

Undoubtedly you remember "The Stag at Eve," that collection of drawings by various artists last year which set the country roaring, and made a few of us sit up, aghast.

Among the illustrators was W. Steig. Now he comes forth with a volume all his own, called "Man About Town," and Long & Smith issue it in handsome fashion.

Alert, penetrating, keen, kindly and wicked are these cartoons. There is not a phase of our town, from a fancy-dress ball to a tenement kitchen, that Mr. Steig overlooks. He is as wonderful, in his way, as the late Phil May, and as caustic and biting as Peter Arno. Nothing escapes his observing eye. He sees us all, with our foibles and grotesque stupidities, our absurd shortcomings. And he mocks the grandeurisms the haughty elevator man, the racketeer, the clubman, the panhandler, the butler and the hotel clerk with equal fervor. His children are impudent and worldly wise.

For Sophisticates

No joke was ever so funny to me as that showing the department-store Santa Claus addressing his heavily bearded and dressed-up underlings, saying to two identical rows of underlings, "I don't see Moscovitz."

The old-time "he and she" joke went out when the New Yorker came in. Another indication of the swift age in which we live. Why did someone long ago not think of this quick way of telling a humorous story? The point is made with added clarity, and we see now the futility of the double line. Perhaps this rapid-fire type of jocularity will prove a hint to the long - winded after - dinner speakers of the future. That would be a blessing indeed. We have learned that one pithy sentence is worth a torrent of words.

I recommend Mr. Steig's modern humor to all sophisticates, and likewise to timid souls secretly anxious to know what is going on in the world.

Bias-Cutting Novelty by Patou

Revival of Capes on New Lines is Feature of Fall Styles

By PARIS BUREAU

PARIS, Oct. 22—One of the high spots in the new list of Paris fashions for winter is the revival of the cape. Perhaps it should not be called a revival, for these new capes are unlike any that Paris has seen for a long time. They are a new fashion if any fashion really can be called new—and threaten to replace coats of many types.

Practically every fashionable dressmaking house in Paris is showing some type of cape—a coincidence which reflects a feeling that women like capes, have missed wearing them the last few years and would like to try wearing them again. There are capes of all varieties—sturdy, all-weather affairs of tweed, frilled little things that just cover the shoulders and made of velvet or soft fur, jacket-length capes and dress-length capes, for morning, afternoon and evening wear.

One of the most successful capes in Paris is Lucien Lelong's evening wrap, done in finger-tip length, of black velvet and ermine. Sometimes it is seen in brown velvet. It is worn over a white georgette evening dress. Note how simply it is cut, swinging freely from the shoulders and voluminously full at the hem. Note how the soft folded ermine collar wraps closely around the throat, with the outside end tucked into an immense buttonhole just below the throat line.

The Patou dress, of white corded velvet, shows the new diagonal lines about the waist and hips. It is another new feature—a higher back decolletage, in square cut.

Harking Back!

Do you recall when Joseph C. Pelletier took his oath as the new District Attorney on Nov. 13, 1909—on an unlucky day for good luck . . . When Society's "Jerry" Farrar was never described without some mention of her "Dutch Clip" hair get-up . . . When Society folks were agog over President Taft's nephew, Walbridge S. Taft—a Yale man who was going to Harvard Law—becoming engaged to a Boston belle, Ethel Herrick . . . When Hubites were awed by the great electrical show at the Mechanics Building in '09 with it a true revelation in lighting effects . . . When Lynn's 13-year-old Mabel Patten won ballet honors in the opera "Huguenots" . . . When Carleton, leading man in "Shenandoah" at the Castle Square theater, never failed to make his entrance—after a terrific off-stage war battle—looking very spic and pan, sans any dust or prop dirt, and, always very matinee-idolish! . . . When Billy "Songman" Gleson made his stage debut at the Day Sq. theater in East Boston which was managed by Abe Montague, with Beulah eHath "presiding at the piano" . . .

Wonder if any reader would be interested, in having the front page of a Boston newspaper dated 1789, containing a copy of George Washington's speech . . . One of our "Harking Back" contributors wants to sell it . . . Did you know that Boston and there are close to 6000 boys on the sts. of Boston—from 12 to 21 years of age selling papers and the Boston Evening Newsboys' Foundation is going to help them? . . . And now Vaudebilt's Jack Eastman has opened the Studio Club down there . . . Today, master-of-ceremonies Johnny Harrigan is finishing out his third day of mingling with his buddies" of the 55th Artillery C. A. C. A. E. F., at the convention here at the Bradford . . . But he refused to wear one of their whoopee berets! . . . And Johnny wanted to know if the reason "Scooter" Lowry ("Our Gang-er") has the hobby of collecting police badges is because it's another badger game!

Marathon Aftermath:

While Marie Pappas, second place winner in the recent Revere dance Marathon, was standing and waiting to make her first stage entrance at the Bowdoin last week a youthful gallant asked her how she was feeling after her 108 days' and nights' endurancing . She said, "Okay" . . . He offered her a chair . . . With her answering him, "No, thank you, when I sit down my feet ache terribly!" . . . Which reminds us that pretty Jean Reed, the blonde Marlene Dietrich of the Marathon, put on 15 pounds and says that "underweight people should go in a Marathon because they'll gain weight and it's a good vacation!" . . . She's going to trip the light fantastic in Lou Walter's new Cascades revue . . . And is a specialty tot-dancer!

Crazy for Horses

Ann "Red-Headed Woman" Boland was cantering o'er the Fenway bridle path early last Sunday morn . . . And spilling luscious glances on her three musketeerish escorts, Newton's Andson Allen, Mattapan's Bill O'Leary, Jr., and Ken Marshall, Middlesex College medical student . . . That's kind of cornering the market, we'd say! . . . She is very pretty, the Renson Brookline's handsome Eddie Gallagher dashes out Needham way so much lately! . . . And Billy Shumaker, B. C. star footballer, and his pal are rushing two gals from Wellesley! . . . And you can bet it's girl-trouble—the reason Brighton's "O'Kie" O'Callahan is forgetting his bowling champ prowess to take those dancing lessons . . . When Ruby Newman and his Ritz Carlton Orchestra play during our announcing the Coleman Fashion Parade, on Monday afternoon at the Roxbury Ladies' Helping Hand benefit, it will be his contribution out of respect to the memory of his late beloved mother, who was devoted to the organization.

Footlight Fare Is Full of Merit

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

While there always is an easy opportunity to say something nice about the prevalent vest pocket editions of popular musical plays, the real glamour of such enterprise must rest serenely upon the head—or should we say shoulders—of Anatole Friedland. In any event Mr. Friedland has skilfully reduced "Fifty Million Frenchmen" from a full sized show to 90 minutes, and as far as one could see at the Metropolitan yesterday, he never missed an important item.

While it is not always easy to reconcile shifty, practical vaudevillians in the stern roles of musical days demanding $3 for a single seat in the orchestra section, the cast which moved along in the tabloid version at the Metropolitan yesterday more than held its own. Of course, there was no Billy Gaxton to pep up the proceedings; nor was there a Helen Broderick. But there was an affable, hard working Richard Lane, and a more than interesting Gertrude Mudge to take up the burdens laid down when the original play had run its course and became available to producers who pare 'em down to popular fancy and lower prices. There is a picture, too, at the big playhouse, with Warner Baxter declaiming eloquently in a political extravaganza called "Six Hours to Live." Between the film and the stage show there is much upon which to pin your faith. Both are more than acceptable.

Richard Lane

It is natural, perhaps that we distribute more congratulations upon "Fifty Million Frenchmen," This, in its original form as a four dollar show, ran but little behind "Of Thee I Sing" in popular appeal, Herbert Fields wrote a good book for it; Cole Porter, an adept in composition, never turned in a better score. And, of course, in the long run of its Broadway success, it lifted Helen Broderick from an unknown comedienne into a glittering star. She was the life of the party. The role retains all its gay flavor and Mia Mudge, its present occupant, misses none of its brighter points.

It would be senseless to attempt any comparison between the "Fifty Million Frenchmen," as you saw it at the Colonial two years ago, and its abbreviation at the Metropolitan. It is cut down, naturally, for time must be made for the feature film, for Arthur Martel's popular moments at the organ and for the always expressive trailer which warns the customers about the shows to come. Even Fabien Sevitzky's carefully conducted overture with the big Met orchestra seems to coax audience interest from the other main features of the program.

And all these interests are incidental to "Fifty Million Frenchmen"—the gayest and the most uniquely produced of any of the tabloids we have seen. There has been no stinting in personnel; there has been no shaving down of talent in the feature grades. Lynne Dore, a specialty singer, amply fills space between the 10 scenes; Billy Baiter and his sister supply dance numbers when the program would otherwise sag and, perhaps, grow dull.

As it appears that the major picture emporiums are moving determinedly toward musical show accompaniment for current films, may we urge a broader field of operation for Anatole Friedland. "Fifty Million Frenchmen," though condensed, remains excellent entertainment.

Emile Boreo in Stellar Show for Loew's Final 'Vode' Week

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Talent is one thing, genius a bird of another feather. Once in a blue moon genius hauls into spotlight view. Emile Boreo is a case in point. This Continental performer, with all the earmarks of the touch of gold in thespian ability, is featured on the current Loew's Orpheum stage program. It happens that this is the final week of vaudeville at this long established home of the flesh-and-blood; and so it is befitting that rare merit mark the show which next Thursday night rings down the curtain in favor of an all-picture policy.

The last bill has abundant entertainment value, but Boreo is so unique that he would stand out of a galaxy of stars. We can recall no actor in "vode" with his excellence in so many varied ways. His versatility is amazing. He can sing, dance, imitate, patter along—and how he can act! From tragic to comic his lines run, and in serious vein he is the equal of the great dramatic lights of the stage. His "L'Aiglon," incidentally the high spot of vaudeville drama in some years, reveals the reason for his prowess along "legit" lines.

Emile Boreo

But this hap from Paris does much more. In fact, the audience kept applauding to woo encores; generously he responded, until finally, with perspiration streaming, he had to bow off by introducing the next act. Boreo's wooden soldier number is a gem; his evolution of a hat, is clever; his lovemaking in different climes is astonishing. He is amazing at the piano and on his feet. And he is the best pantomimist we can remember since many years ago.

Little wonder then that Boreo, a truly great actor, "wowed" the house for a triumph.

Benny Davis has a corking fine revue, and it just happens that he is in unusual company; else his presentation would take all the laurels. Benny has teeming talent with him; and songs and dancing are both tiptop. Valentine Vox, with Helen Royce, go over big. Other acts are Billy Farrell and Dad, and Chappelle and Carlton in a comedy skit.

The feature film is "Kongo," with Walter Huston and Conrad Nagel, Lupe Velez and Virginia Bruce.

Next Friday the Orpheum will show pictures "day and date" with the State. The first will be Norma Shearer in "Smilin' Thru."

Constance Bennett Given Role of Jo in "Little Women" Film; Katharine Hepburn in Cast

By HARRIET PARSONS

Copyright, 1932, by Universal Service, Inc.

Los Angeles, Calif., Oct. 22—Constance Bennett will play Jo in "Little Women." Yes, I know, I know. I thought I was losing my mind, too. I have seen some astonishing pieces of casting in my day—but since M-G-M put platinum blonde Jean Harlow in the "Red-Headed Woman" I've gotten my shock absorbers adjusted to the point where nothing surprises me overly much.

Checking the history of "Little Women" I find that Alice Brad-ley and Katharine Cornell have preceded Connie in the role which makes it much less amazing.

Katharine Hepburn, Dorothy Wilson and Anita Louise, as previously announced, are set for the other leading parts.

Evelyn Knapp and James Murray have been signed by Harry Cohn for the leading roles in "Air Hostess," the Grace Perkins commercial aviation yarn which Columbia is producing. Al Rogell will direct and Milton Raison did the adaptation. John is trying to get either Evelyn Brent or Margaret Livingston for the other feminine lead with Livingston standing the better chance. Margaret is spending a few weeks in Hollywood on business while her husband, the less-stupendous formerly Paul Whiteman remains in New York.

This and That:

Fox has signed Genevieve Tobin on a five-year contract. Walter Wanger left for the East by plane. Trip is for the purpose of settling his case with Paramount. Neil Hamilton has been ticketed by Columbia for "Acquitted." The Jo Swerling yarn which Roy Neill is directing. "Acquitted" is the story I mistakenly referred to as "The Quitter," due the fact that Henry Cohn was either eating an apple or chewing a pencil when he told me about it over the phone.

A Yarn on Houdini

Hollywood is "Now You See It" for a very spicy—but I suppose temporary—title for a yarn based on the life of Houdini. Fulton Oursler, who's turning 'em out faster than Henry Ford, wrote the story and he and Dudley Murphy, who also will direct, are working on the screen play for Radio. Picture won't go into production for five weeks. Speaking of Radio flicks Chase has finished her role in "Animal Kingdom" and departed for New York Thursday night to be gone till June.

Heard and Overheard:

Wilbur Daniels Steele, one of the best short story writers in America, has been signed by Radio. He's driving out to the Coast with Norma Mitchell, his actress wife. You've read Steele's stories in the annual O. Henry prize collection. William Dieterle will direct "Grand Slam," the Warners' bridge epic, instead of Al Green. Allen Jenkins and Robert Warwick have been signed for "Women in Prison." Warwick was a big shot on the stage and in pictures during the early silent days. Doris Kenyon leaves next Thursday on a concert tour which includes an engagement in New York in December. She opens in Louisville, Ky., November 1. Ruth Donnelly replaces Johnna Howland as Mary Brian's mother in Warners, "The Inside."

Hollywood, My Hollywood

Jean Hersholt's son, who just graduated from high school, has changed his name from Allen to Jean, Jr. Whereas Creighton Chaney, son of Lon, has a clause in his contract which stipulates he can't be billed as Lon, Jr. Walter Huston is out on bicycles and keeps one at his home in town and one in his mountain cabin. Rian James, former newspaperman, is so used to working under deadline pressure that he's turning out yarns for Warner faster than the higher-ups can read 'em.

Snapshots of Hollywood

EDDIE CANTOR departing for New York to fulfill his radio and vaudeville engagements. He's leaving the wife and kiddies here for the winter. The new floor show at the Frolics proving a knockout with EDDIE GARR scoring as master of ceremonies and the youthful and talented oborus clicking in a big way. LEW CODY n' PHILLIS CRANE BUSTER KEATON and a brunette. ROBERT YOUNG, FRANCES LEE 'n' JIM CREELAND, GEORGE RAFT and EDDIE SUTHERLAND (staggering it) at LEE MOORE'S Culver City night spot. The Club New Yorker also featuring a new floor show that's a honey with MALIN'S midget stooge, MONA RAY, the only entertainer held over by him from the original set-up. The FRANK JOYCES the ZEPPO MARXES, BETTY BRENT 'n' HARRY EDWARDS, the ROCKY twins 'n' JULANNE JOHNSTON, COLLEEN MOORE 'n' AL SCOTT, BETTE DAVIS, SPENCER TRACY, RALPH BELLAMY and THE MISSUS, among those on hand to applaud JEAN MALIN'S new routine. That's all Lolas. See you Monday for the last time.

The New Plays

Included in the cast are Henry Hull, Eric Blore, Edith Atwater, Helen Claire and Gwen Thomas. Staged by Arthur Sircom; produced by Kenneth MacGowan and Joseph V. Reed.

SHUBERT—"Show Boat," a revival of Florenz Ziegfeld's most pretentious gesture in musical production. Adapted from Edna Ferber's story of the same name by Oscar Hammerstein II; music by Jerome Kern. Included in the cast are Norma Terris, Helen Morgan, Eva Puck, Sammy White, Paul W. Keast and Bertha Bellmore. Dances arranged by Sammy Lee; costumes by John Hardrider. Produced by A. C. Blumenthal.

HOLLIS—"Trial by Jury" and "H. M. S. Pinafore," third week of the current revivals of Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera by the Civic Light Opera Company. A twin bill. Included in the two casts are Frank Moulan, Frederic Persons, Roy Cropper, Joseph Macaulay, Vivian Hart, William Danforth, Fay Templeton and Laura Ferguson. Staged by Milton Aborn.

WHIMSICAL MEDITATION

Helen Chandler, whose arts are exhibited in "Vanity Street," new film at RKO Boston.

An intimate scene in "Strange Interlude" at the Majestic. Ralph Morgan and Norma Shearer are engaged in one of those sparring bouts in which romance makes very little progress.

Tallulah Stars in 'Faithless' at State

By HARRIS MORGAN

Loew's State furnishes the important movie item of the moment. It concerns Tallulah Bankhead. This lady has been embarrassed by so many poor stories since her entry into films, that the current venture was anticipated as holding the secret of her Hollywood future. Until now she never had the chance she needed. "Faithless" for the cast of which she was a "loan" artist, turns out to be, for her, a distinct triumph.

There's a second point of importance, and it is this: Miss Bankhead appears to have opposite her Robert Montgomery. She and he hit it off perfectly together. They became ideal movie mates. Due to them and sterling support, and particularly deft direction, "Faithless" is entertaining despite its being packed with too much plot. Essentially, is an old theme in new guise. But it tries to say too much, and were it not for its direction and actors, could easily suffer the fate of that other notorious story rambler, "Blonde Venus."

At the start off Montgomery is an advertising expert, "struggling along on $20,000 a year," and Miss Bankhead is a millionairess, no less. Depression hits them both, and they part. He goes afar; she wins Up with a swank apartment and a "gentleman friend." Accident brings the sweethearts together again, they wed. Both are near starvation, and in the first job Montgomery is seriously injured.

To provide medicines and other necessities, the wife takes the "easy way." Other troubles ensue, with the happy ending at the fade-out.

All this is made realistic by the telling direction of Beaumont, and the brilliance of Miss Bankhead. The role enables her to run the emotional gamut, and every gesture, every word of hers ring true. She and Montgomery give conviction and grip to the whole narrative.

Ah, Sweet Mystery of Politics Again

By GILBERT SELDES

I have received a letter from a woman in Chicago asking me to do something about her husband's employers, who have, in some way, let it be known that if he does not vote for Hoover he will be discharged. There is obvious terror in the words she puts down, terror of a hard winter without food; yet her man wants to vote for Roosevelt, and the other men at his shop tell him that the bosses can find out how he voted. He is afraid to protest; he is afraid to take a chance. I can't reassure him a great deal, although I believe intimidation of this sort is not only contemptible but is actually a crime, punishable by law, and I do not see how the boss will learn for whom the worker votes unless, finding no votes whatever for Hoover, he may discern the truth. To me the method of intimidation, is exactly parallel to the threat of suicide, and no one should pay attention to it. Except insofar as it suggests that the G. O. P. is committing suicide, which seems likely.

Gilbert Seldes

Short Memories

My inability to understand politics grows with every week of the campaign. A few days ago Nelson Harding had an amusing cartoon apropos of Mr. Hoover's quaint little remarks about saving this country from dribbling off the gold standard. The picture showed the Republican elephant pointing to a blackboard on which were written various slogans for the past years—for 1929, no depression; for 1930 a little depression; for 1931 a passing depression, and for 1932, I saved you from a dreadful depression. (These aren't the exact words, but the general sense.) The picture reminded us that we are being treated like babies, without sense or memory. Yet I can understand a politician of a low order saying such things and depending on time to erase one catchword before its conflict with the next is manifest.

What I do not understand is saying Yes and No in one breath. The present Republican argument is that we are now, at this moment, recovering; all those magnificent forces which Mr. Hoover says he forced the Democrats to set into motion have been working for months, and the danger is that if we change parties now we will check the tide of recovery. Examine the argument closely and you will discover marvels. The first is that we should be recovering in the midst of a campaign. Our dear Republican leaders are not only economists, they are miracle men, every one of them, if they have accomplished this. That signs of recovery are multiplying, I grant; that they are as thick as thieves, I doubt.

But the catch of yes, so appear. For three months it has been a foregone conclusion that Mr. Roosevelt would be elected. Regardless of merit, Mr. Hoover is on his way out, and the only question is whether he will go with the dignity of a President, or the mean slide of a politician. Regardless of merit, too, Mr. Roosevelt will go in—he would be sent in by a protest vote even if he had not impressed the country. If business men are as dizzy as they pretend to be they must have known this eight weeks ago. They must have suspected it even before Mr. Roosevelt was nominated. Yet—with the virtual certainty of a Democratic victory—business has been recovering. Mr. Hoover himself has said it. He can't possibly mean that business has been improving on the bare chance of his re-election.

I suggested a few weeks ago that the election of Mr. Roosevelt would make an more cheerful in the months between November and March; that the prospect of being a winter out the end of which the administration would start all over again, was too brutal. Isn't it possible that we are recovering precisely because we know we will not have Mr. Hoover land to be sure Mr. Curtis and the Hawley-Smoot tariff) next year?

College Nags

The current issue of The Commonweal discusses Henry B. Pritchett's suggestion (in the Atlantic) that horses racing be substituted for football at our larger colleges, or at least at the colleges having the largest stadia. The purpose is to attract crowds, of both sexes, which would pay good money and have fun without absorbing so much undergraduate energy as football does. It is a sensible idea, but The Commonweal does not go far enough into the difficulties. One is the notorious commonness of horses; another is the reluctance of a good horse to learn anything whatever about Roman architecture or the dimensions of the moon. The horse, I am afraid, could not be a collegiate athlete. More intelligent than many athletes he may be, but it is the firm principle of American education that no fullback, no quarter, no end shall win glory for his college without being paid for it—not in money, but in diplomas and degrees. And horses have never yet come down that low.

Air Line Rates to Springfield Are Cut

The airplane passenger rate between Boston and Springfield was reduced to $4.29 today by Inter-City Air Lines, this rate being only 75 cents higher than the regular train fare of $3.54. This is believed to be the only air route in the country with a rate so near the railroad level. The old air rate was $4.

THE VOICE OF BROADWAY

By LOUIS SOBOL

Prattle and Tattle!

Of course, all I know is what I hear and what they tell me and what I see, and chief among the things I hear this week is that Ruth Mix has confided to intimates that she will wed a very well known comedian shortly and that the genial comic, William Demarest, former Vanities star, and his wife, have parted. On the other hand, the Hollywood Revue beauty, Rosemary Murphy, and her millionaire spouse, Noel Kilgen, have kissed and made up and are sharing the same apartment again. One of the leading recording firms isn't paying its artists and the latest vegetable (I guess it's a vegetable) rage is the bet-ter spots is something called "mockie" which looks like a cross between celery and lettuce and tastes like absinthe. The Dr. Julius Lemperts are preparing the bassinet again and George Washington, who never read a Broadway column, was actually born on Feb. 11, 1732. Marjorie King and the younger heir to the McMartin millions are in The Throes and an interesting foursome occasionally seen together in Hollywood these nights comprises the romancing Helene Costello and Hugh Trevor and Betty Compson and her new flame, Irving Weinberg.

The Compson gal and the Trevor lad were both until recently the purringest and cooingest twosome in all Hollywood. By the way, you've heard frequently of how comedians and columnists refer in Joe Miller's joke books. Well, it's a fact that Joe Miller never wrote or told a joke in his life, couldn't read and couldn't write.

Katherine Rosenwald (Taber), niece of the late Julius Rosenwald, and heiress to a vast fortune, will wed Leed Howes, picture actor, all parental objection having been removed. The Edna Lambert-Leo Friede romance is definitely iced and Louise Brooks, former pet name of Lee H. Ascher, of Wallin' Wall, merely speak to each other now. An odd note for you—Queen Victoria was never Queen of England—she was actually the king—king implying ruler of a male sex—and in regard to sex. Morris Weingarten, president of the London Shoe Company, and Hyson-ed Adelaide Zuckerman are Enamored and Boston inaugurates its Saturday night high-class dances at the Hotel Statler, Nov. 5, with Rudy Vallee leading the orchestra. The comedy who attracted attention Tuesday night dancing a, old fashioned dengozo maxixe at the Montparnasse, were Jay Thorpe, the Social Register and a lass named Mrs. McLaughlin, who was better looking two years ago as Dorothy Castle. Billy Yates, the Don Bestor crooning guitarist, who eloped with Dolores Dolle some months ago, becomes a pappy next month. Is Ivar Kreuger really dead?

At Smith, between editing the Outlook and making campaign speeches, Al Smith negotiates options with a group of toy manufacturers to move into the Empire State Building as one of the largest night clubs in the city will open on the second floor of the Brill building on 49th way by Broadway, with Joseph Urban designing the settings. Josephine Dunn and June Knight, both blondes, with roles in the forthcoming production, "We Three," tossed a coin to decide who would dye her hair black—this being a request of the producer. The loser's gal lost and is now a brunette. The department store Louis Littmanns inherited a boy Tuesday and Mark Hellinger, who sailed Wednesday, for a trip around the world, wagered Bill Rowland, a director of shorts, that he wouldn't take a drink for eight months. The reason many fellows can't settle down, sagely observes Mac Haber, is because they can't settle up.

Clap Calloused Mitts for the most graceful of the younger dancing teams, Edna and Johnny Torrence, at the New Yorker grill and Roxy: 'Smilin' Thru," at the Capitol, a flicker that'll bring the handkerchief to your eyes, you softies, with a special hurrah for a grand performance by Norma Shearer; the George Washington Hotel air musicales with Baritone Rex Sheridan over WOR; "Dark Lustre," a fast reading novel by Geofrey Barnes, who, if I'm not mistaken, is really James Whittaker, former husband of Ina Claire; "Torch Singer" the Libby Holman tragedy slightly fictionized; Alice Brady, as the frivolous mama in "Mademoiselle" at the Playhouse, and Blanche Bow, the hoty-totsy warbler at the Hollywood.

Among the things that women of Manhattan remember gratefully about Mayoralty Candidate John F. O'Brien is that he was a firm upholder of the rights of common law wives. Darin, the dancer, is opening a night club to be known as the Hungarian Gypsy Trail and the Jonathan Courtneys are preparing the basinet. The Automat people are turning down cellar locations and out on the Coast, Jean James is laid up with sinus trouble. Ethelind Terry, once the slenderest of the Broadway beauties, and now a weighty gal, laffs when you're rude enuf to call attention to her increasing avoirdupois. "I eat well, I sleep well, I'm having a great time—why should I worry about weight?" Jock Whitney and Bob Benchley toured all the better and hotter spots the other nite and remained strictly sober, and still another radio mag will be out shortly, tagged "Big Time," with Don Herman and Rudolph Field named as publishers. The very prankish Mister H. Jonathan James is now sending cards out which you sign bequeathing him all your property. The foot note at the bottom of the card reads: "The Bureau of Prohibition holds that wines and liquors may be devised by will only to 'the widow, children and other relations residing in the dwelling of the deceased owner at the time of his death." But this inhuman restriction, of course, will be null and void when the Volstead Act is repealed." The next revolution will be in Honduras, right after the election Oct. 30.

New Work by Carpenter Played for First Time at Symphony

By MOSES SMITH

"Patterns," the latest orchestral work of John Alden Carpenter, Chicago composer, who is also a business man, is given its first performances at this week's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky.

As further tribute to one of our foremost American musicians Mr. Koussevitzky pairs the same composer's "Skyscrapers" with the novelty.

Mr. Carpenter's new work, scored for modern orchestra with an important piano obligato (played by the composer at these concerts), is about 20 minutes of continuous music, without division into movements or sections. There are, however, many changes in mood through the composition, though the prevailing tone is sentimental—in a long passage for violin solo and in a fragmentary waltz. There is also more than a suggestion of jazz.

The title which Mr. Carpenter chose is a deliberate and explicit indication that the music is to be heard for itself, not with any literary or descriptive program in mind. By implication, too, it takes the sting out of any possible criticism that the work is too fragmentary in character, that it lacks continuity—which is exactly the criticism I should like to make.

Mr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra were similarly—perhaps even more—at home with "Skyscrapers," the rowdy tunes and rhythms of which lent the matinee audience away in exuberant spirits.

Football in Lavender: The Pants Run Wilder Than Their Wearers.

We've Stood for a Lot, But St. Mary's Goes Too Far in Trousers.

NOW PUL-LEEZE, MR. MADIGAN!

O, the little red pants the halfback wore,
The little red pants the halfback wore.
The big tackle grabbed 'em and they got tore,
And you could see that halfback more and more.

When the Colgate University football team takes on N. Y. U. at the Yankee Stadium this afternoon, the Colgate players will wear red pants made especially for this game. The idea is said to be to arouse and infuriate the New York team so that it will forget its best plays, although so far as I know Bull Montana is not a member of the Violet varsity.

Just what the real advantage of red or purple or orchid pants for football players is, I haven't the faintest idea; nor why they should have special trouserings for special games. Perhaps the coaches feel that it adds a festive note.

At any rate, Harvard, taking up where Radcliffe left off in the wild and woolly 80's, sports red pants and has for several seasons. Army, when last seen by ye scribe, affected a gold and black striped trouser, which was neat but not gaudy. So, I believe, does Princeton and certainly when Missouri (my very own Alma Mamma, for shame, for shame) came to New York to play N. Y. U. the first time, they turned out in a gilt, gold and Zebra striped outfit that made them look even funnier than they played. The big yokels!

All they needed were nice flowing Windsor ties and you couldn't have told him from Little Lord Fauntleroys at any stage of the proceedings.

N. Y. U. itself has a leaning to violet striped panties, which the co-eds think are just too sweet, and in the lush days when Mr. John F. Meehan was the head man at that university, they were wont to release great flocks of homing pigeons with violet streamers tied to their legs from the field between halves. I never understood this, either, but I guess it must have been to break the news to Mother Machree.

This Is Too Much:

Throughout this period of strange and exotic costuming for the big he-men who entertain us on the gridiron each autumn Saturday afternoon, this bureau has maintained a discreet and dignified silence. We didn't get it, but we did keep still about it.

But now comes news from our West Coast Scout No. 1 in San Francisco which breaks down the last barrier of our reserve. It seems that Mr. Slip Madigan's St. Mary's team, which will be on here to tackle Fordham a couple of Saturdays hence, is not satisfied with green or yellow or pink or cerise pants, but mixes 'em up. Thus, while the ends wear blue pants and the other members of the backfield red pants, the quarterback appears in LILY WHITE TROUSERS. Can you bear it? The little rascal! I'll bet he's just too cute for words, too.

And will he be mad if the Polo Grounds is muddy the day he plays here! But personally I hope it won't be muddy—much.

Of course, if the coaches insist on going ahead with these experiments in color, it will only be a question of time until some big lout, fresh from the plow, will show up in the dressing room before some big game, biting his fingernails and stamping his foot and refusing to play unless he is allowed to wear the team's cerise panties.

There may be some scientific principle which tends to show that a man wearing pink pants will carry a football farther than a man in those old gray moleskins that Coy and Hinkey and Mahan and Heston wore. But those old timers seemed to get around pretty well. Indeed, I believe I could name about eleven of 'em who could roll up whatever pants they chance to be wearing at the moment and step out and give all the pink pants football teams you ever saw a lacing. Yeah, and in spades.

Can you imagine what that Hinkey would have done to an opponent in a pair of orchid trousers?

So, less pants and more punts is our motto. From now on we are going to root for the team in the dirtiest uniforms. Have we made it clear that we are agin pink pants for football players?

GREEN MAY UPSET PLANS OF HARVARD

By COPELAND C. BURG

New York, Oct. 22 (INS)—There's always a dark-colored gent in football's woodpile, but just how anyone can figure that Army, Harvard and Princeton will be overtaken by an upset in the three outstanding eastern tilts this Saturday was one of today's bigger and better mysteries.

Army plays Yale at New Haven, Harvard has Dartmouth at Cambridge and Princeton takes on the Navy eleven at Princeton.

The Cadets, the Crimson and the Tigers offer a natural parlay, but if there has to be a monkey wrench cast against the trio to spoil everything Dartmouth gets the call.

Things have never been so bad at Yale and the Navy as at this writing but Dartmouth, always rising to dizzy heights from often early season off-form while battling Harvard, may have a chance to score the thrilling upset.

HARVARD IS BEST

Yet Harvard, this week-end at least, may be the best team of the six.

The Crimson's team of stars washed up Buffalo 60 to 0, and New Hampshire 40 to 0, and last week took a weak Penn State team, 46 to 13, but if the latter score does not seem good enough it may be cast out entirely for Coach Eddie Casey withheld from view many of his best plays.

Up at Hanover, Coach Cannell has been trying one shift after another and by the time the Green gets in front of Harvard it looks as though his mind will have been made up far too late. Harold Mackey at left end of the Green has been none too good at times and Cannell may do better Saturday with Bill Embry at that wing.

MIDDIES OFF FORM

Army lost to Pittsburgh, which they tell me is the best in the East, by a small margin, and Yale has yet to win a game, failing apprt before some extremely weak competition.

If possible, the Middies are worse than the Elis. Navy did manage to defeat Washington and Lee but William and Mary humbled the Navy men 6 to 0 and little Ohio University walked over them, 10 to 0. Princeton showed as much improvement as a chorus girl after a steak dinner in holding Cornell to a tie and Princeton surely must enter Saturday's victory column along with Army and Harvard.

Boston has been hit with injuries since the season opened and as a result it is in fourth place but Jaime will take on Pedro Lopez and Mephisto will meet Jim Wallis in the two main bouts, both two out of three fall matches.

IRISH TO SHOW NO MERCY

South Bend, Ind., Oct. [illegible]. There was a real football atmosphere around Notre Dame today for the first time of the season as Notre Dame awaited the arrival of Tech.

Notre Dame has played [illegible] games, mauling Haskell, Wabash and Drake in unmerciful fashion but Carnegie Tech may be the opening of real competition. The Irish appeared to be a cinch, but there were memories of what happened in two other meetings with the Skibos. In 1926 at Pittsburgh, Carnegie ruined an undefeated season by winning, 19 to 0, and in 1928, the boys from Pittsburgh came west and gave a Notre Dame its first beating in 25 years of battles on Old Cartier Field.

Coach Hunk Anderson had given the word that no mercy would be shown by Notre Dame, and advisory Coach Wally Steffen of Carnegie hinted at a surprise.

Governor Breaks Ct. Law to Aid Pointers

Hartford, Ct., Oct. 22 (AP)—The intervention of Gov. Wilbur L. Cross, it was disclosed today, permitted the West Point Cadet Corps to come to New Haven for the Yale-Army football game in buses owned by a company which does not have a Connecticut license.

The state motor vehicle department informed the bus line it must pay a $516 fee. At a conference with the governor, however, permission was given to carry out the original plan.

Haverhill, Beverly in Crucial Test for Grid Title

By BILL CONNELL

A league football title, and the unblemished records of several elevens, hung in the balance today in the great program of schoolboy grid battles.

Somerville was at full strength for its march to Dickinson Memorial Stadium, where Newton awaited Charley Dickerman's latest and last Suburban League product. Somerville quits the circuit after this season, and naturally wants to snatch the title. A win today for either would mean a lot in the final reckoning.

Buckley, Androski, Arbesne and Falco, in the Somerville backfield, are clicking now. The loss of Ferguson threatened to wreck the attack, but the present quartet has the ability, and the plays, and is doing nicely.

REAL TRIPLE THREAT

Somerville was a slight favorite in the game, but anticipated a tough time proving its superiority to the Newton youngsters.

Lawrence, twice defeated, but a top group eleven nonetheless, headed for Everett, and the home team was in for a wild afternoon. Everett was a slight choice, but its supporters refused to give any odds on the team.

Malden high was rated a bit above Manchester, N. H., Central which Hubie McDonough brought to Malden today. Capt. A. Kerwin, Fred Hanifan and Tom Reid halfbacks, with Sam Sabinsha at quarter, form a standout quartet, which was figured to give Malden an edge, provided the line came through.

Arlington, unbeaten and untied, was expected to run Watertown, at Arlington, but the latter has been pointing for this game and was ready to give Ed Crowe and his galloping mates a difficult day.

Medford, beaten several times, yet was feared by the Salem eleven as it prepared to entertain Medford at Bertram Field. After a slow start Medford has improved rapidly. Farnum and Hudson Medford wings, and a couple of smart pass receivers, and Salem defensive assignments were planned to keep these two covered.

WATCH KESSLER

Fans going to the Salem game were going to watch the offensive guard play of Charley Kessler, Salem. Charley was billed to switch to left end on defense, if not needed near the middle of the line.

Haverhill prepared for the visit of Beverly with fear and mingled rejoicing in the home camp. Beverly smashed Peabody's string and was ready to perform the same office for Haverhill.

Lynn English appeared due for another unpleasant day, with Walsham invading Pilot Field. Birtchnell and Blekatis, Harrigan and Falzona had plenty of trick [illegible] ready to spring on the Lynn English boys.

Brookline hoped to get going, in its second start of the year, at Russell Field North Cambridge, where Rindge Tech was host [illegible] a Suburban league encounter. Rindge's seasoning, and Vito Amatis in the backfield, shaped the team up as

Tad Jones to Kick Off in Sunday Tilt

Meriden, Ct., Oct. 22 (AP)—It's an old custom to ask candidates to throw out the first ball in a baseball game, but "Tad" Jones has received a more seasonal invitation, that former Yale football coach, who is a Republican nominee for Congress, will make the kickoff Sunday in a football game between town teams from Meriden and Portland, Ct.

Albie Booth, backfield star for Yale last year, who is a Republican campaign speaker, will be one of the officials.

FISHMAN THRILLS 32,000 IN HARVARD BATTLE

PENALTIES MAR FURIOUS FIGHT WITH GREEN

By BILL GRIMES

straight dive smash with Fishman carrying the ball to Harvard's 36-yard line.

GREEN PAYS PENALTY.

Glazer was detected holding and Dartmouth was set back 15 yards to mid-field. Morton kicked after one running play on which Powers failed to gain. Morton kicked poorly, the ball going outside on Harvard's 30-yard line.

After Crickard failed to gain on two plays, Dean got off a miserable kick, the ball going out of bounds on Harvard's 47-yard line.

Dartmouth was unable to get its running attack to function and Morton kicked the ball going over the goal line, giving the Crimson a first down on its 20-yard line.

BRILLIANT RUN IN VAIN

On the next play, after Crickard ran 20 yards, the ball was called back and Harvard was penalized 15 yards for holding. Harvard's ball, first down on its five-yard line. Following two line plays, which picked up about 12 yards, Dean got off a beautiful punt, which went over Fishman's head and rolled to the 24-yard line.

On the next play Fishman broke loose on a reverse and wiggled through the entire Harvard team to the 30-yard line, where he was brought down by Crickard. The play was called back and Dartmouth was penalized five yards for offside.

Following one unsuccessful play, Wells gathered in Morton's punt and dashed back to Dartmouth's 45-yard line where he was forced outside.

Dean completed a forward pass from Wells on Dartmouth's 19-yard line, on which Branch was caught napping, making the play complete. Morton intercepted Wells' pass but was dropped in his tracks by Nason on his own 12-yard line as the first period ended scoreless.

During the opening period Harvard and Dartmouth were both stopped by penalties. An offside penalty on Fishman's run was costly for the Green while a holding penalty nullified Crickard's dash and put the Crimson back on its 9-yard line.

MORE PENALTIES

A flying block by Harvard penalized the Crimson five yards at the start of the second period. Fishman went through Francisco for six yards and Morton punted low to Wells who was dropped by Donner on his 24-yard line.

On a new line shift today, Crickard around Embry for a first down on his own 48-yard line. And then an exhibition of clever dodging signalized the next thrust through Dartmouth line, after which Dean broke through an made a first down on Dartmouth's 43-yard line.

PUNTS ACROSS LINE

Fishman allowed Wells' punt to roll across the goal line. The Big Green put the ball in play with Morton carrying through the center of the line for 5 yards.

Harvard stopped Dartmouth's running attack and Wells was brought down by Branch after receiving Morton's punt on Harvard's 44-yard line.

On a quick kick, Wells again punted poorly and the ball went outside on Dartmouth's 29-yard line.

Dartmouth used a new shift on the next two plays, both which were piled up by Harvard and Morton kicked outside on Harvard's 30-yard line.

Wells kicked again and this time the ball went over Fishman's head to the 5-yard line where the Maiden boy picked it up and ran back to the 17-yard line where he was brought down by an avalanche of players.

The Harvard line was charging too fast for the Big Green and Morton was forced to punt to Crickard at mid-field.

DEAN'S BRILLIANT RUN

Harvard picked up afour yards on a Crickard rush, but Nevin put it back and Wells punted where the ball was downed by Hardy on the 15-yard line. The Harvard defense proved too strong and Crickard made a fair catch of Morton's kick on Dartmouth's 45-yard line.

On the next play Dean broke into the open from a 20-yard run off scrimmage and took a forward pass from Wells to the Dartmouth 15-yard line.

While crashing the Dartmouth line for 3 yards, Crickard was injured. Locke replaced the Harvard ace.

The right side of the Dartmouth line broke through and stopped Locke and it was fourth down with seven to go when Wells kicked a goal from the 23-yard line for three Harvard points.

So What?

By JOE MOONEY

Today we have a little football lyric from an Ossining, N. Y., contributor.

The author was going to call it "Open the Gates." But it sounded too much like a hymn. He wanted it to sound like a hint.

So, after a three-months' huddle with himself in solitary confinement, he came up with a new title: "A Bongfest for Sing Sing."

It goes to the tune of "Our Director," because a couple of the collaborators used to work in a bank. The words:

Break those rocks for Sing-Sing,
For Sing-Sing wins today;
Extra beans for suppers,
Who says crime don't pay?
Sweep out the cell again,
Victory, my eye—
But we'll make the first string
team, boys,
Because we're all here 'til we die."

to kick over the Army goal from the Cadet 32-yard line.

Roy Evans, alert Army center, pulled down one of Parker's passes at midfield as Yale started another offensive, but the Cadets could not pierce a stubborn Eli line and kicked to Yale's 20. A 15-yard penalty for holding set Yale back to the 5-yard strips and Army faced another fine opportunity as Parker's kick out of trouble carried only to his 45-yard marker. Again the Yale line with its new ends, Johnny Overall and Bob O'Connell playing magnificently, held Army's plunging offensive.

"Pick" Vidal, who almost beat Pitt last week, took MacWilliam's place at quarterback for Army and led two drives that smashed at the Yale goal as the first period ended with Fields at the kick a pass from Fields at midfield and raced to Yale's 18-yard line, but the Elis held downs at the 11-yard mark. Vidal then raced Parker's kick back 30 yards from midfield and had blasted to the Yale 15-yard line as the period ended.

Score: Army 0, Yale 0.

SECOND PERIOD

After Yale had made its third brilliant defensive stand to take the ball on its 19-yard line, Vidal finally broke away after an exchange of punts to race 73 yards along the sidelines in a dazzling burst to Army's first touchdown. Charley Broushous promptly came into the Cadet backfield and drop kicked the extra point to give Army a 7 to 0 lead.

TELLS OF FIRST SPINNER PLAY

By DICK HANLEY

Football Coach, Northwestern University

Chicago, Oct. 8 (INS)—An offensive move in football which befuddles the defense or misleads it as to where the play is actually to hit is characterized as a deceptive play.

Much time is spent by football teams in building up their offense in order to get their opponents to fear a certain strong phase of attack. Once a team has its opponent in this state of mind the stage is set for the deceptive play.

Deceptive plays are always intriguing. In this category must be placed the most deceptive of all plays, the spinner. A great many coaches have been given credit for the origin of this play.

Consequently I was interested last summer, while watching a series of football movie shorts, to hear that famous coach, Judge Walter Steffen of Carnegie Tech, explain his first experience with a play of this type.

STEFFEN TELLS STORY

"This is the way the Judge explained it:

"In 1924 Carnegie Tech was playing Washington and Jefferson and our opponents using the Warner type of double wing back offense. They had a very dangerous runner playing the left wing back. One of their basic plays was where he ran with the ball after it was handed to him by the fullback on a reverse.

"Carnegie felt that in stopping him it stopped the opponents' offense. Our scouts had advised us that we could detect by this man's actions when he was going to carry the ball on this particular play.

Consequently we arranged to have our defensive end play as close to him as possible. And to drive across the line of scrimmage when the ball was passed and grab him whenever it appeared that he was going to carry the ball.

STOPPED BY SAFETY MAN

"Upon one of these occasions our end knocked him down before he actually received the ball from the fullback. And the fullback with his arm free left to pass the ball to, looked about him for something to do. He spun around while retaining the ball and ran through Carnegie's line 40 yards, unnoticed before the safety man finally tackled him."

For some time the judge gave his opponents credit for a new play, but after the game he learned from the opposing coach that it had merely been an accident. His honor, however, wasted no time in working this play into his own offense and it became a basic part of his attack at Carnegie Tech.

Bowser Bans Dempsey as Referee

And now Paul Bowser has barred Jack Dempsey as referee. He says it wasn't done just to keep in step with the Massachusetts Boxing Commission either.

"Dempsey won't be the third man in the ring when Nick Lutze and 'Gentleman' Jack Washburn meet at the Boston Garden," said Bowser. "Dempsey is a former boxing champion, and so let him stick to his own game. He would not mean a thing as third man in the ring at a wrestling show.

"I don't know yet who will referee this bout, but you may be sure I shall select a first class official. If he comes from outside of Massachusetts, you may be sure he will be a man of national standing."

FITTONS AND PERES TILT AT TEPEE TOMORROW

CASEYS PLAN TO USE 2 SETS OF BACKS

The Pere Marquettes and the Fittons, their lineups studded with ex-college stars of national fame, cash in their annual game at Braves Field tomorrow afternoon as some 25,000 fans are expected to watch the semi-pro classic.

Those who have seen both elevens in their campaign this season seem to feel that the game will be a battle of strong defensives with the Peres squeezing out a victory because they seem to have just a trifle more power.

GREAT BACKS.

But how either team is going to get the ball for running backs or the receivers to use the Pere-backed aerial offensive is still a mystery. Frankie Wallis, Plan backs O'Leary and Peck.

In the front wall men the Caseys have two sets of backs, both strong, and capable of gaining plenty of territory. The Fittons started the Peres with Fisher, Dietz, Scheraschewsky, Mark, Vedovato, O'Connell, Kelley and Griffin.

The rival lines are plenty rugged with Colucci and Cavalieri, the Casey centers, offering. They Cross against the Fittons in the college on the Pere wings.

The Fittons in the remaining positions, are evenly matched.

MILLIONS LOST BY INSULL IN TRUST CRASH

This, the final chapter in the story of the Life of Samuel Insull, describes the events leading up to the collapse of the magnate as the greatest power in the utilities world.

(Copyright, 1932.)

Samuel Insull's attempt to perpetuate the "Insull dynasty" was the main cause of his downfall.

The two huge investment trusts were launched by the most powerful utility magnate in the country as a means of insuring continuance of Insull control for himself and for Samuel Insull, Jr., after his death. Instead they turned upon him and cast him from his throne, plucked him of his power and finally hurled him into exile, defendant upon a $5000 annual pension from each of his three major operating companies.

Insull's personal fortune of $100,000,000 or more was swept away in the debacle. With it went his $4,000,000 Libertyville estate, "Hawthorne Farms" and his opera building penthouse. In addition he was plunged into debt for $8,000,000 at least. Probably his total debts will rise to $10,000,000.

Pension in Balance

From salaries totaling approximately $400,000 a year from his various companies, he is reduced to a pension totaling $18,000 a year, a figure that Insull would have sneered at during the height of his power. Even this pension hangs in the balance now as does his liberty.

Insull's major mistakes were the formation of the Corporation Securities and the Insull Utilities Investment Trusts, and the purchase by the trusts of great blocks of stock in his operating companies at the peak of the market prices. At one time these trusts were valued at $140,000,000 and $250,000,000, respectively. With the market collapse and the squeezing of more than $136,000,000 worth of market value from these stocks, the debacle occurred. Sinking with Insull in the catastrophe were remnants of small investors, the chauffeurs, cooks and others in lesser walks of life to the captains of industry themselves who had sunk great portions of their fortunes large and small into the Insull system.

Defeat Unbelievable

The proud emperor who could not conceive of his own defeat began to lose his judgment several years before the smash. The purchase of a New Jersey utility being in the territory of his Eastern utility group was one of his first false steps. At first he ranted against the great rise in his stocks, which he declared were soaring above their earnings value, no matter how it was figured. Later he was carried away by the "new era" of finance, and fearing the inroads of Cyrus Eaton, Capt. Alfred Loewenstein and others who had coveted the Insull empire, he formed the investment trusts to "protect" his control and called upon the public to help him.

Panic-like he became desperate, and forgetting, or disregarding the fact that it was mostly the public's money with which he was dealing, rather than the personal funds of Samuel Insull, he plunged himself deeper and deeper into the financial morass.

Insull even then refused to face the facts and prayed for a turn in the business cycle to pull him out. He addressed his investment trust stockholders at a meeting at Ch.ic Opera House, Chicago, in one of the most trying periods of his 72 years. At that time he "explained" the reason for the great depression in the market price of his stocks. Even at that late date he was [illegible] confidence.

Flees to Paris

But the conservative bankers to whose counsel Insull had turned a deaf ear during the prosperity wave could no longer throw to his support the great sums needed to refinance his organizations. His great conglomerate of utility companies was wrecked.

Insull and his wife slipped quietly out of Chicago and took a small suite in a Paris hotel, where an [illegible] guarded by the Industrial Guard, had occupied a whole floor. His brother, Martin, upon whose management of the Middle West Utilities, the Insull holding company, was blamed much of the trouble, also left the country. With his wife, he took up residence in a small Canadian boarding house. His arrest marked a sensational point in his broken life.

The name of Insull today has lost the panache it held a few short years ago. Insull, once a name to conjure with, is liable now to become a handicap to those who bear it.

Samuel Insull will be 73 years old on Armistice Day, November 11 of this year. He is too old to come back.

As far as the business world is concerned, everything that can now happen to Insull is an anti-climax. His career is over.

(Lamar, Mo., Democrat)

There was a accident at the game between Opolis and Lamar Sunday. Slatterly, who caught for Opolis, had occasion to shoot the ball to Ensminger at third when Harvey was at bat. Slatterly, apparently without looking, hurled the ball, and it hit Harvey, who stood fairly within arm's length of him, in the side of the head. It knocked the Lamar third baseman cold for about two minutes. But presently ol' Harve come out of it, and went on with the game as if nothing had happened.

BUNGLER FAILS IN ARSON PLOT

A very apt bungler, who couldn't have done a job much worse if he had studied for it was spotted by police today after an attempt to set fire to the . . . house of the Grand Picture Co. in Rutherford Ave., Charlestown.

The building, owned by P. A. Gillette & Co., of Boston, was entered through a window which was crashed in on the second floor. In breaking the window the intruder cut himself badly, a trail of blood being left from the window to the inside.

On the second floor the intruder then lighted two fires and for some reason took off his hat and coat and laid them on the floor. The larger of the two fires, which . . . was set under a fusible sprinkler, which was set off by the heat and extinguished both fires and sounded an alarm.

Apparently frightened by this adverse turn, the firebug left his hat and coat behind and fled, breaking another window, cutting himself again and leaving a trail of blood from the building into the Boston & Maine train yards.

Police were told that a man, hatless and coatless, had been seen jumping aboard a moving freight train in the train . . .

PRICE CHANGES NARROW, WITH CLOSE STEADY

New York, Oct. 22—Price changes were narrow in today's trading on the New York Stock Exchange, with the close steady.

An even hundred stocks closed with net advances, while 187 registered declines, mostly fractional, and 138 finished the day unchanged.

RAILS DO THE BEST

Rails acted the best of any group. An increase of 24,942 in car loadings over the previous week's total bolstered the market, along with a dribbling of short covering.

In the initial dealings, the list showed some signs of continuing yesterday's decline, but rails rose 1 to 2 points, pulling up leaders in other groups, on appearance of the weekly car loadings report.

Most of this rise was lost in the last hour, however, but the list closed with a steady tone, with most net changes of negligible proportions. Trading was extremely dull, with a turnover for the two-hour session of a little under 450,000 shares.

Carloadings for all class 1 roads, as reported for the week ended October 15, showed an increase of 24,942 cars over the previous week, in contrast to Wall Street advance estimates of between 10,000 and 20,000 cars. This boosted the total to 650,078 cars, a new high for 1932, and 14½ per cent under the like period of 1931. These figures indicated clearly that the autumn season peak was being made later than usual.

Temporary gains of 1 to 2 points in such issues as New York Central, Southern Pacific, Atchison, Lackawanna and Union Pacific were lost, those issues closing virtually unchanged.

COVERING IN TOBACCO

U. S. Steel common finished about unchanged, but the preferred lost a couple of points. Among issues closing off fractions were General Motors, Case, Woolworth, United Aircraft and Corn Products.

American Tobacco "B" appeared to reflect some short covering, rising 2 points, part of which was lost before the close. American Can and Bethlehem Steel finished fractionally higher.

Brokerage comment stressed preelection hesitancy, a normal phenomenon at this time. Business in the exchange was said to originate chiefly with floor traders, with the outside interest largely dormant.

Week-end reports from the steel industry were moderately encouraging, with estimates that ingot output next week would hold at least around current levels. Little encouragement was reported as result of inquiries for steel for structural projects.

Foreign exchanges were firm for a time, with the French franc making further gains, but yesterday against the dollar lightened as trading continued, with most of the gold currencies falling back before the close.

Cotton moved narrowly, finishing 10 to 20 cents a bale lower.

More Cars Handled in Week by Pennsy

Pennsylvania Railroad System, during the week ended Oct. 8, handled 91,771 loaded revenue freight cars, of which 56,075 represented cars loaded on the company's lines and 35,696 received from connections.

The total compares with 89,897 cars handled in the preceding week, and 118,242 in the corresponding week of 1931.

White-Studebaker Merger Effective

Merger of Studebaker Corp. and White Motor Co. has been consummated as a result of deposits of the latter's stock totaling more than 88 per cent, A. R. Erskine, Studebaker president, notified stockholders.

Erskine extended an offer to holders of the remaining shares of White Motors not deposited to deposit their holdings under the same terms on or before Nov. 10 next.

Twin City Reports Quarter Net Loss

Twin City Rapid Transit Co. for the quarter ended September 30 reports a net loss of $211,376 after taxes and fixed charges, as against a net loss of $113,271 in September quarter of 1931. Nine months' net income was $39,381, as against a net income $220,970 in the first nine months of the preceding year.

Kildun Preparing New Cyanide Plant

New cyanide plant for treatment of ores is being developed by Kildun Mining Co. Mill has been purchased and work in this connection has started, the company announced. At a recent meeting directors authorized the project.

In carrying out this program, the company declared no financing is anticipated.

Dividends

Long Island Lighting Co. declared a dividend of 10 cents on the common, payable Nov. 1 to stock of record Oct. 27. Previously the company paid 15 cents quarterly.

At Montreal the Ontario Steel Products Co. took no action on dividend of $1.75 on cumulative preferred due at this time.

JUST LIKE A WOMAN

Feminine Interests in the Day's News

By Marguerite Mooers Marshall

Love Is Given a 'Second Chance'

I LIKE the faint perfume of dried violets
Pressed between the yellowing pages of a love letter
Is the fragrance of an old-fashioned love story of real life,
Which the newspapers printed the other day.
Its heroine was Miss Annie Teller,
An old, old lady, born 92 years ago,
And a direct descendant of President John Quincy Adams.
She was found dead in her little East Side room,
And her own kinsfolk told
Of the brief pathetic romance
Which drove her from them,
And from the girlhood home
Where love had come to her—and gone.
It was in Westchester, in Spring,
With a rosy cloud of apple blossoms scenting the air,
That a young man wooed young Annie Teller,
Told her he loved her, asked her to become his wife,
And she sent him away.

MADE MISTAKE

He married another woman.
And then Annie Teller knew that she had made a mistake,
That she loved him all the time.
That she never would love anyone else.
She never married, she lived always alone.
But every Spring—so the tale runs—
Annie Teller made one brief journey to Westchester,
When the apple trees bloomed again,
And in her heart bloomed the memory of her lost love.
It's a pathetic page from the past—
And some readers will sigh, because
"Girls aren't like that, nowadays"—
And we can answer only,
"Thank God, they're not!"
"Thank God that the modern girl refuses to be a Blighted Rejection—
That she chooses to give love a second chance!"

THE DIFFERENCE

For a feminine martyr to constancy,
Interred her life in mourning
An unfulfilled love, a lover lost, strayed or stolen,
May be a wistful romance—
But it's as WASTEFUL as it is TWISTFUL!
Every girl disappointed in love should read "Treehaven,"
Which is Kathleen Norris' new novel.
About a girl who does NOT marry her first lover,
But who comes to love utterly the man she marries.
"Marrying you was my way out, Jim," she tells him.
"No one knows, except a girl tied at home.
Waiting for lovers, marriage, waiting for life . . .
How bewildering it is, how stupid one is,
How horribly afraid that nothing's ever going to happen.
Any troubles with husband and babies and money
Are real compared to that!
"It's the difference," as Kathleen Norris says.
"Between being awake and being in a dream."

Laxative Habit Is Worthless and Dangerous

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

IN A MEDICAL survey recently published, many interesting facts were brought to light concerning constipation. It reminded me that too little attention is given the danger, the real menace attaching to habitual use of laxatives.

Here is a thing I urge my readers to remember: Constipation is never cured by laxatives. On the contrary, their prolonged use tends to increase rather than to decrease the tendency towards constipation.

Unfortunately, too many individuals believe that when there is any abdominal pain or difficulty in normal elimination, it is time to use a strong laxative. This is a dangerous practice. The pain or discomfort may be due to acute appendicitis, and if this is the case great harm is done by taking a cathartic.

When the pain or discomfort, on the other hand, is due to faulty elimination, a laxative does not remove the irritation. It aggravates rather than soothes the lining of the intestinal bowel.

There are other reasons, too, why cathartics should not be taken. A laxative often forces food along so rapidly that its value to the body is lost.

Try to determine the underlying cause of the constipation. It may be due to faulty diet, to improper and faulty posture, to fatigue, or to lack of exercise, as well as the continued and unnecessary use of laxatives. When these faults are corrected, permanent cure may be effected.

"BE SMART"

Drawn by Nell Brinkley

"CLOTHES ARE OF THE UTMOST IMPORTANCE—A WOMAN SHOULD LOOK HER BEST AND HER SMARTEST AT ANY TIME!"

So little Mrs. Mille reads, and wonders just how it can be done ALL of the time! Mrs. Mille is lost so much of her time in the affairs of helping her family to live right that "her moments" seem just occasional ones. Those affairs are peculiar in that they take up lots of time, they have a way of needing old clothes for the encounter, they banish spare moments, they make Mrs. Mille show dim in a cloud of steam and a sound of sizzling, they take the curl out of her hair, and in the end she comes out a very necessary and lovable and unselfish person, but with infrequent chances to look "chic" and "smart" all of the time.

But I'm wondering, and so are you if you have some beloveds, too, how dull the world would be if every single living woman was a glass of fashion and an elegantly dressed woman "AT ALL TIMES!" If your little mother, and mine, should suddenly turn over a new leaf and become a rival of Mrs. Jean Nash, where would our happiness be?

Nice to be well turned out. But better to be loved, and unfashionable some of the time.

NELL BRINKLEY.

The Marry-Go-Round

Middle-Aged Romeos

By HELEN ROWLAND

WHEN A WOMAN marries a man, she feels so self-conscious that she goes around to all her friends "explaining." Or apologizing.

But when a man marries a girl half his age, he feels so exultant and self-satisfied that he goes around bragging about it.

Helen Rowland

An attractive, middle-aged man of my acquaintance, with plenty of money and good looks, complains sadly that he can't find a companionable wife in all this land of lovely women, because "all the YOUNG women are frivolous, selfish, mercenary and light-headed. They have no BRAINS!"

Of course! Why not? To any man, who has been used a second set of bridge-work and to wonder just how long those precious locks across his forehead will last, any YOUNG woman would seem frivolous and brainless. And almost any girl, who would marry a man twice her age, IS mercenary. Funny how these men, who have lost most of "that schoolboy" hair," still cling to the delusion that they are wasting time on anything but "that schoolgirl complexion."

All men are more charming and more interesting at 20 or 40 or even 50 than they are at 20. There is no reason in the world why a lone man in his forties or fifties should not find love and companionship and even romance. But he won't find it in the kindergarten or in the high school or on the college campus or at the debutante parties.

I have seen the most pathetic cases of attractive middle-aged men tied to giddy young wives, who either bored them to death or worried them to death.

When a fresh, lovely young thing marries an older man, she feels that she is conferring a lifelong favor upon him. And she expects him to PAY for it, not only in money, but in self-sacrifice—the sacrifice of all his habits, pleasures, tastes and creature comforts. It is just about the most expensive gamble in the matrimonial lottery!

Why does a man (who would look like God's Gift or Prince Charming to a woman of 30 or 40) want to take a babe to raise? Is it just to have somebody around to brush his toupe, ladle out his tonic and find his glasses a dozen years hence?

If you must have romance and the renaissance of youth, then find it in somebody who speaks your language, whose ways are your ways, and who sings your songs. Somebody to whom you still seem young and charming and who will not make you feel as though you were washed off the Ark by the flood.

* * *

That old theory that "a man is as young as he feels" is just poppycock. A man is as old as he looks to the woman he loves. Just as a woman is as old as she looks to the man she loves.

Don't Take the Girl Too Seriously

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Recently I met a girl of my own age (24) whom I have been seeing once or twice a week for the past months and a half. She had been going out with another fellow, whom she met before becoming acquainted with me. When she first told me about this other man she admitted she didn't know which one of us she preferred. Later she told me I was the favored one, but she changed her mind after seeing the other fellow and sent me a letter stating that he was the one she wanted.

J. K.

Dear J. K.—Don't take girls of this type too seriously. It's like putting your faith in a weathervane.

Pork Sausages for Breakfast

Just the Thing for Autumn Mornings

By MARTHA LEE

THESE COOL, snappy mornings bring the family to breakfast with few calls, especially if a teasing aroma issues from the kitchen.

A more substantial breakfast is in demand and nothing is more satisfying than nicely browned pork sausages, especially if they're the pedigreed kind made from New England Fresh Dressed Pork. It is no trick at all to serve nicely browned sausage if the links are placed in a cold skillet and cooked over a low flame. Cover for the first 10 minutes of cooking. Turn sausage frequently and move in pan to prevent sticking. Pour off excess fat, remove cover and increase flame to brown links, or parboil 2 minutes before browning.

Sausage and Apples

Cook sausage following directions given above. Wash, core and slice apples, but do not peel. When sausages are cooked, remove from pan, and place on warm serving plate. Put apple slices in frying pan and sear on both sides. Cover and cook slowly until tender. Pork sausage patties may be substituted in place of links if preferred.

Sausage and Bananas

Cook sausages as directed. When cooked, remove from the skillet to finger lengths of toast on a hot platter. Then remove the skins from the required number of bananas, allowing one banana for each serving, cutting in halves, lengthwise. Squeeze a few drops of lemon juice on each half. Roll in flour and saute in the sausage drippings until a light brown in color. Serve on platter with sausage.

Sausage En Ramekin With Eggs

Fill individual ramekin or baking dishes 2-3 full of sausages. With a spoon press the meat to the sides of the dish to form a well. Place in a moderate oven 5 minutes, then remove from oven and break one egg into each, being careful not to break yolk. Sprinkle top with equal amounts of grated cheese and breadcrumbs mixed together. Return to oven and bake 20 minutes.

Suggestions For the Housewife

CEILINGS CLEANED—Dissolve a good-sized piece of ordinary washing soda in warm water, dip a cloth into it, wring fairly well and wipe over ceiling and walls with it.

COFFEE STAINS—Rub stain very gently with a bit of glycerine. Then rinse in tepid water and iron until dry with a very moderate iron on the wrong side. Do not use a hot iron.

FEET, TIRED—Into as hot water as can be endured dissolve a handful of salt. Then soak the feet for ten minutes and dry thoroughly. Powder feet well with one part of dry boracic powder, two parts of powdered starch, one part of powdered French chalk to which has been added just a few drops of eucalyptus oil.

What to Say When Greeting Friend

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MISS BEECKMAN:

1. When an acquaintance says, "How do you do" upon meeting, what is the proper thing to say?

2. When one says that, is he asking you how you are, or it that just a greeting. H.

1. "How do you do" is the usual, conventional, correct thing to say as acknowledgement of an introduction. Each person says it. If we say this when we are introduced, we will say it right. If we try to improve on it we may not be right. So, obviously, it's better to "stick by the convention."

2. This phrase is just a form of greeting. I'll admit it isn't very logical, for we really at that point aren't particularly concerned with how the other person "does."

Daily True Story

In Love With Art

ROBERT WELLS placed his monocle in his left eye and stared at himself in his cracked mirror. The broken reflection that glimmered back at him did not reduce his estimate of himself.

Robert Wells was going to a party—a swanky affair, right off Park Ave. He was going there—with his worn and sole tuxedo, with an English cape because he had no Winter overcoat, and with exactly 12 cents and four cigarettes in his pocket.

The year had been bad for Robert Wells—gay, poseur, merry dilletante and artist of merit.

But no worry could ever bow the head of Robert Wells. He was a gallant soldier in a lost cause. He hated the conformities and the restriction of a straightfaced civilization.

"If I could only get myself a patron during this period to tide me over," he mumbled to himself, "or—a patroness."

He smiles to himself as he made a final adjustment to his tie, thinking:

"Well, here comes another opportunity."

OPINION OF DEBS

Our hero's opinion of the general assortment of debs, subdebs, near-debs and would-be-debs was not a very exalted one.

"There not a decent one in the entire crew," he once remarked, meaning merely that there was not one among them fit to be a model.

After having consumed a number of drinks and shaken hands and exchanged some repartee, Wells noticed a girl sitting idly in a corner of the reception room. The lights being dim, he thought she might be pretty. He approached and noticed a high, straight forehead, calm dark eyes and a firm mouth.

"I'm Wells, the artist," he remarked, introducing himself, "you look rather intelligent."

"That's a left-handed compliment," she replied, "a girl would rather be called beautiful—especially by an artist."

"Not your type," he replied coolly, "I know my women."

"You're getting rather possessive," she parried, "I'm not your woman."

"You should have added the word 'yet,' Wells answered. You will be."

She laughed at his self-assurance, and their conversation continued. Wells was visibly impressed and so was Virginia Meredith. They were enjoying it hugely, and they became inseparable for the rest of the evening.

Several weeks later Virginia was in the garret studio of Wells. They were chatting gaily. Suddenly he asked her to pose for her.

ACQUAINTANCE GREW

"But I don't disrobe," she laughed.

"You don't have to," he replied. "I have plenty of nudes. I want to plant an unusual type—the smart girl, and a lovable one."

They whiled some hours away and Virginia grew hungry. Wells confessed he had nothing in his larder. She offered to go out and buy some food.

"But I can't cook," she laughed.

"I can," answered Wells, "and by the way, have you ever tasted any better coffee than mine?"

Thus their acquaintance and their affection grew apace. Virginia learned devious ways of slipping him money. She bought a new easel for him and new paints. She kept him supplied with food and with drink. One day she suggested that he move into a nicer studio.

"I'll be able to get you some big commissions," she explained.

Wells was walking one day through a half-forgotten section of the city when he suddenly stopped in front of an inconspicuous "for-sale" sign. He looked at the structure. It was astounding for its antiquity. For a while he could not figure out whether it was an old church or a Flemish castle. He stepped inside. A doddering septuagenarian met him.

Of course the price was prohibitive. But Wells went through the place—and the more he saw the more he was astounded.

The aged relic of a man explained that the building was now a clubhouse deserted by its old members who had moved to distant parts.

Wells returned to his garret flushed with enthusiasm. Virginia was there waiting for him. She noted the gleam of excitement. He described the place.

"That's the spot for me," he declared. "I could fix up a magnificent studio and an art gallery. I could have a small art theater in the auditorium. And it's absolutely fascinating."

He took Virginia over to see the old clubhouse and she was enraptured, too.

Wells and Virginia were in their Flemish castle superintending the installation of the few pieces of furniture that belonged to Wells. She was speaking in reply to a question.

"I told my dad that I wanted to go into dramatics and I explained to him it would be cheaper to buy this old place than to rent a modern theater."

A GOOD FAMILY

"He must be a card, at that," answered Wells. "Do you know"—he suddenly stuttered, "that's a good family for a guy to marry into."

"What do you, mean?" she laughed.

"Well," he replied, regaining his self-assurance, "you love me and I love you—and what's to keep us apart?"

Virginia embraced him gently, then kissed him lightly. "You're a swell sport," she said, "and I would marry you at once. But I know you don't mean it. You're not the domestic type—and I couldn't live in a house without Frigidaire and an elevator."

"You embarrass me," remarked Wells, "What do you suggest?"

"Let our romance be," she remarked—"just as it is—in the high platonic plane. At least, until I fall in love with another more like my class with whom I could remain married happily."

Wells stared at her wide-eyed for a moment. "You are the most intelligent girl in the world," he answered, smiling.

"MARY FAITH"

How a Fascinating Heroine Met Old Problems in a New Way

By BEATRICE BURTON

"I'll be right out," she said, and hung up the receiver for a second. Then she took it down again and began to rattle the hook up and down to attract Miss Gilday's attention in the outer office.

"Will you please call a taxi for me right away, Miss Kelly?" she asked when Miss Kelley answered her.

Then she looked up at Mark Nesbit once more.

"My husband has been sick—terribly sick—with pneumonia," she said to him in the voice that was a wailing cry. "And they've never let me know—his people! Not until just now."

She began to put the papers and pencils on her desk in a drawer and to pull the dust cover over her typewriter, while Mark Nesbit stood and watched her, his hands stuck in his pockets and his lips pursed up as if he were trying to whistle.

"I'm going out to him. Do you mind?" she asked, slamming the drawer and turning the key in its lock.

"Of course not. I'll go downstairs with you and wait until the cab comes," Mark Nesbit said quietly. He held the door open while she bent down her wraps from the coat-tree in the corner and put them on.

Looked Curiously

Then the people in the outer office looked up curiously as the two of them came out of the little room and started down the stairs that led to the first floor.

Mary Faith barely saw them. No one truly existed for her at that moment but Kim. Her thoughts flew ahead of her to Dr. Thatcher's tall old-fashioned house in Bleeker st. where Kim lay ill.

"It must have driven you mad in my car," she heard Mark Nesbit say to her, but it was a minute or two before his words carried any message to her brain.

"The taxi's all right," she said then, and she spoke as she saw it drive up before the building and heard the scream of its brakes as the driver jammed them on. "But thanks—you're very good."

At the door of the taxi she broke to him again. "You don't know how sorry I am about—all this, Mr. Nesbit. I've told you before that you're the kindest person I've ever known. Only, you see——"

"I see. I see, Mary Faith," he said to her and touched her into the cab. Through the frosty glass of the window she saw him smile at her. Then he had put a coin into the man. And when it turned the corner a minute later he was still standing on the snowy curb looking after it.

Kim in Big Bed

Kim lay in a big carved walnut bed in a big highboarded bedroom in Dr. Thatcher's house. His fingers were locked across the top of his breast chest, and his gray eyes, a bit sunken but brilliant as always, stared from the pillow. He who sat beside his bed, to his mother, who stood at the foot of it.

Mrs. Thatcher, in a black dress made of elephant's breath gray voile, was doing most of the talking. She had spent 20 minutes telling Mary Faith how she had been taking care of Kim for the past three weeks, and now she was explaining just why she had sent for her.

Mary Faith's big frightened eyes widened.

"Doctor thinks—in fact, Doctor says that he's got to get right out of this climate right away," Kim's mother continued. "He thinks he'd better go to New Mexico or Arizona—one of those climates. A winter there will put him in the shape, he says. He's sure of that. Only you see, Mary Faith, we just don't know how to manage it. Kimberley's not well enough to work, and we aren't rich enough to pay his bills out there and provide a nurse for him too . . . and he'll have to have one for a little while. We thought perhaps you could find something to do out there—something to earn a little money."

She gazed at Mary Faith questioningly, and then remarked:

Can't Leave Doctor

"I'd go with him, but I don't see how I can leave Doctor for one more night. Ella said, she'd go but you know she hasn't any money . . . We can scrape together the railroad fare for two people, but that's all we can do, Doctor and I."

She turned and lumbered toward the door, bumping against the marble-topped table in the center of the room as she went.

"I'll let you two talk it over," she said, and closed the door very slowly as if she meant to make as little noise as possible.

Mary Faith got up at her suddenly. His quick flashing grin that immediately made him look his reckless debonair self.

"You are still worrying about Claire, Mother?" he asked. "If you are you can cut it out. I haven't seen her for a couple of months. I haven't even thought of her—very often. They refused her a divorce here and she's gone out to Reno to try to get one there."

He got up on one elbow. "You know what I've been thinking of the last week while I've been lying here, Mary Faith?—Remember those letters that you have been sent you? The picture of those mountains out in Arizona with all the flowers lying along the base of them—and the pepper trees and the eucalyptus and all the vegetable gardens"—Well, I've been thinking it must be a pretty grand place to live in. I've always had sand and sage and office buildings, Mary Faith. Maybe if we go out there I can get a job after a while, and we won't want to come back here——"

On Her Knees

And then Mary Faith was on her knees beside him, with her arms tight around him and her tears warm against his cheek.

"Kim, I just knew you'd want me back again sometime—like this," she said huskily. "I've told you six months ago that you would, didn't I? And you thought I was wrong. Oh, you darling, you darling I?"

"Sure, you've been right about everything, and I've been wrong. I've wondered a thousand times, lying here, how you could have taken me back so many times after all I'd left you and stayed away from you for months at a crack . . . Gosh, there's not another woman in the world who'd do it, Mary Faith."

But her everything was all right then. Without any work in sight or any way of earning money, without a cent in the bank for the future, with nothing but the promise of $200 from her father to herself and Kim and the baby, she still knew that everything would be all right. She would make him, in time, come out all right, somehow or other.

"Kim," she said, "I think I'll run downstairs and telephone a wire to Jean Bartlett to tell her to get rooms for us at Santa Barbara. She's been wanting me to come down there and I'm going to take us in until we find a place of our own."

Went to Phone

Mrs. Thatcher said that Mrs. Puckett would probably lend them some money and they would surely be able to pay it back after a while. Mary Faith felt power and hope stirring within her as she braced herself for the long struggle ahead.

She got up from the floor and walked across the room to her sleepy downstairs to the telephone. At the door she turned for a minute and glanced back at Kim where he was watching her with a look of utter contentment on his face.

"My faith was all of Jericho fell down," Kim," she said to him. "That was a long time ago and it's still happening lovely, day."

And she closed the door and went away while he wondered just what Mary Faith had meant by that.

VALENTINE -:-

By Hazle Livingston

A Heart-Gripping Novel Depicting Love and Disillusionment

One, slightly faded, of Jim Atkinson in his blue reefer and cap, against a background of lifeboats and smacks. One, even more faded, of Val and Millie, heads together. Val with her straight black hair in what Millie used to call a "dutch cut," Millie, unbelievably radiant and young, in a tulle scarf veiling her lovely shoulders.

"PHOTOGRAPHIC PAST"

And then there was a camera study of Millie reclining in a long cane chair in a Chinese garden. And there were other pictures of Millie in very grand costumes, holding roses in her arms. Several dated back to Europe, Palm Beach, Millie on the yacht, Millie and Vincent Shuller with Lovely Lady, the race horse from the silver trophy at the Ambassador show.

And there were several very modern, very French camera studies of Millie in straight, slim dresses, wide shade hats on her knee- taken when she and Mr. Harris were in Paris, of course.

"My photographic past," Millie said, seeing Val's interest, "and then she laughed and added: "But you should have seen the one I burnt!

A the ones with the hot autographs, the flaming, sizzling, old-fashioned clothes. I had some of your and me that were a scream. There was one, with me wearing a Merry Widow hat, decked with red roses, and I had high-laced white kid shoes. You should have seen it!"

"Oh, I'd like to. Why didn't you r ve it for me, Millie."

"What? Oh, the picture. Why, it was ugly. So I got rid of it. Look, Val, isn't this a funny place to live? Do you think you can stand it? Take your things off and then curl up in the dressing room. Right there—sack of the was bed! No, you go in through the bathroom!"

"LIKE OLD DAYS"

Val hung her clothes on hangers that she picked up from the floor. Millie's wardrobe trunk, partly open, was one cornucopia of Millie's dresses, dozens and dozens of them, were crowded tight into the small space. Val put a chest of drawers, all open, odds and ends of Millie's finery hung out. A silk chemise, a torn scarf, a pair or long white kid gloves, a large, torn chiffon handkerchief that had evidently done duty as a dust rag.

Val came out, still smiling. "I can't get over it. It's so much like the old days, Millie."

Millie looked around, smiling a little ruefully. "Beast of a place, really. But I don't do much more than sleep here. We'll be out all the time. We'll probably get taken out to dinner most every night, but if we miss, I can cook. I still like to cook. You can wash the dishes."

The wall telephone in the little square hall jingled. Millie sprang to answer it.

"No . . . Yes, she's just come . . . well, you can take us to dinner if you like. Bring another man for Val. Val, what kind of men do you like? She says any kind. You darling! Yes, I know you do . . . Goodbye, dear Don't be late!"

Smiling Millie trailed back to the living room.

JAPAN INSISTS ON RECOGNITION

Mukden, Oct. 22 (INS)—Reported to provide for economic Soviet recognition of Manchukuo, a draft of the proposed Russo-Japanese nonaggression treaty was received in Mukden today.

While cloaked in utmost secrecy, International News Service learned from reliable authority that the treaty involves Manchukuo as well as the Japanese empire, which would entail automatic Soviet recognition of the Changkun governament headed by Henry Po-Yi, former boy emperor of China.

The treaty draft was received by Gen. Nobuyoshi Muto, special Japanese envoy to Manchukuo. It was generally believed that the draft would be approved by the military leaders.

Soviet Russia first suggested that the treaty be limited to Moscow and Tokyo, but Japan insisted upon the inclusion of her newly founded Manchukuo state.

Marvelous Miss Babette

MORE Marvelous Cat or Snake

THIS IS MISS BABETTE OF THE WONDERFUL SPINE

A clever girl, seen on the stage in England, and presented above, walks on her hands almost as easily as you walk on your feet.

Look at her feet stretched out beyond her head and observe the extraordinary bending of that marvelous Babette spine.

It is said to demonstrate, almost to the limit, the extreme to which the human backbone can go in adjusting itself to extraordinary strain.

If you should see an X-ray photograph of this little girl's backbone your admiration for her would be multiplied by at least 200.

Dr. A. J. E. Cave, who lectures on anatomy at the Leeds Medical School, saw Babette performing and determined that such a spine, or at least X-rays of it, belonged to science.

With those X-rays Dr. Cave went to London, where he lectured on the remarkable backbone before the Royal College of Surgeons.

Every scientist present looked at the X-ray photographs of the little lady's backbone, ribs, etc., so admirably supple, and exclaimed "My, my, my!" or words to that effect.

Great credit should be given to Miss Babette for what she does with her backbone, but it is only fair to the cat and the snake to say that their backbones would make the spine of Miss Babette look like a rigid bar of iron.

A cat in motion represents almost the perfection of grace in movement, and of adaptability as regards its skeleton.

And think of the snake. You have seen the python wound around its victim, and perhaps you have found the skeleton of some innocent little garter snake.

There Nature surpasses herself. There is nothing more pliable than the snake's backbone, especially that of the "sidewinder," a species of rattlesnake that when he threatens to bite you, or leaves you in disgust, weaves himself up and down in knots like a ribbon in the wind.

All this, however, does not take away from the glory of Miss Babette.

New Cars, New Clothes

Signs of Improvement

Signs of improvement in the automobile industry are seen in the fact that America junked 2,000,000 old cars last year and bought only 1,500,000 new cars.

That makes 500,000 fewer cars in service than there were the year before. It means also that a good many Americans will either buy new cars soon or walk. And they won't walk.

Hence the motor companies have reasonable grounds for feeling optimistic. They are offering better cars for less money than ever before. Their business will not come back with a rush, but it is certainly on the upgrade.

And what applies to the motor industry applies with equal force to many other industries. The country has been living on its accumulated products. These products have been used up faster in the last three years than they have been replaced. There is still plenty of buying power, and this buying power is beginning to be put forth again.

A noted American business man once said:

"Our depressions last until the average man has worn out two pairs of pants."

The current slump has lasted until he has worn out three pairs, as well as his car and a few other necessities. He will have to get new ones now. He is not going to appear in the streets clothed in a barrel.

As Good as New!

Hear the glib election spieler
Peddling tinware worn and old,
Like an oily gold brick dealer
Selling brass and burnished gold.
He is full of bunk and twaddle,
Slick and smooth and up to date,
But he sells the same old model
Made in 1928.

One he promised to abolish
All the evils that prevail;
Now he smears a coat of polish
On an empty dinner pail.
There is not a chicken in it—
Nothing but a faded dream.
"There's a sucker born per minute!"
Is the spieler's ancient theme.

—George E. Phair.

Day by Day in Europe

The City Parks

LONDON, Oct. 22—Most London parks could be lost in the Bois. Nor have they the camaraderie to be found in Paris or in the Tiergarten in Berlin. Instead they suggest a bristle of spiff pleasantries, like roadmen hitting spikes. I found myself adjusting my tie and flipping back my hair.

The best-known park is Hyde, offering its fashionable caracole of riders along Rotton Row and Marble Arch, the battleground of the creeds. At the Arch, discontents may hire portable platforms to "blow off steam." Atheist tackles Christian while an audience flings bus-driver retorts.

The only requirement of speakers is to be articulate. They can trim civilization, the Crown, or even God, to their own dimensions. This morning there was but a single knot of listless idlers. A wiry Cockney, after stalking local Toms and Jerries in sundry pubs, hiccupped enthusiasm for increased dole.

One of the memorab'e stretches is by the bridge leading into Kensington Gardens. Here a flock of peacocks strut. One in snow white today was in full preen. I thought of Dolores in the old Midnight Frolic. Hard by is a pond where old men—and why not?—sail toy boats.

On Broad Walk are acres of perambulators where unopened rosebuds, responding to a radiant sun, furl and unfurl tiny pink toes. On the grass older and more acquisitive tots shine with adventure. One toddled toward me. I smiled. She smiled. Then, archly, she turned and scampered away—the little flirt!

We went to government kennels today for Billy. He has not been visited since lodging there because of the disappointment he would feel when we went away without him. Anyway, telephone inquiries announced him aces up. But when we arrived, he was sitting aloofly alone, sad-eyed and slightly atremble at the side of a clean runway. Deaf, he could not hear joyous yips all about. Finally sensing us, he raced down the netted inclosure with bums-like yowls of hysteria. His frenzy finally toppled him into a sort of half swoon. He will never be left that way again—not for all England.

Invariably, I have a sentimental urge for a last look at the curiously old Victorian Strand before quitting London. Piccadilly, Pall Mall, Mayfair and Regent street belong to London, but the Strand to the Empire. Shop windows mirror the broader scope, filled as they are with pith helmets, spine pads and puttees to outfit men who peg the flag in all corners of the world. It is proverbial every weary exile returning from some far flung frontier steps from his train and makes a beeline for the Strand.

For a half hour I watched the parade of prisoners before a white-wigged justice in Bow Street police court. Mostly a collection of drunks facing five-shilling fines, but one bald-mannered man, the type you imagined might keep rabbits in a back yard, was caught up oddly. For no reason he walked up to a well-dressed lady looking in a window and slapped her face. His explanation was even more curious. His wife had been ragging him for a new dress and the lady's fine frock incited unreasonable anger.

From Bow street, I went over for a close-up of Scotland Yard—that oddly named central police station once "The Yard," but because it was moved onto a Scottish land grant was rechristened Scotland Yard. It is an enormous red building, planned for an opera house but abandoned after the foundations were built. Like all police stations, it was forbidding and offered the sad, dry smell of lye.

London is highly publicized as a man's town, deservedly. But my only purchase was in Burlington Arcade, where after fooling so long I nearly got locked in—hey, Jack, gotta match!—for the night, I took on a pair of pajamas with white jacket and black pantaloons, patch-pocketed in fiery red. They will be something to hang out on the Monday line when I get back to Park avenue!

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

Everybody's Muddled

IT WAS A GREAT RELIEF to me when I found that everybody's muddled.

Of course, it was a great surprise at first, and, considerable of a shock; for my elders had given me such a different idea when I was a child!

According to them, grown-ups knew everything. Grown-ups were never cry-babies. Grown-ups never made silly mistakes. Never dropped and forgot things. Never left things all higgledy-piggledy. Always knew exactly what they wanted to do. Always wanted to do the right thing—and did it.

Elsie Robinson

And if I was a good girl, and did what I was told, that's the way I'd be some day. I, too, would be wise, and strong, and sure, and never make mistakes.

Would I be sure, then, whether I wanted a pink ribbon or a blue one, without changing my mind dozens and dozens of times, and then wishing I'd gotten the other one instead?

Yes, they assured me. I'd be perfectly sure just what I wanted all the time. And I'd never want silly things, either, or get mad if I couldn't have them.

As I advanced in years, came to be the enormous age of 17, this faith persisted. And I began to look forward to the solid years of maturity; for 17 is certainly a pesty age. Page that hur who first said that youth is the happiest time of life. I wasn't having a happiest time. I was, generally speaking, having the heckuva time.

Nobody understood me. Worse yet, I didn't understand myself. I never knew what I wanted to do, and, when I did, I didn't want to do it. Make up my mind? How could I, when I seemed to have a new mind every minute?

And presently I was 27, instead of 17, and should have become a grown-up, too, with the Guaranteed Grown-up Poise and Power. But, to my secret shame and consternation, I was nothing of the sort. Outwardly I put up a pretty good bluff; but, inwardly, I was still 17! Inwardly, I was as far from knowing what I wanted, or looking it when I got it, as I had been at seven!

So the years went on, with the accumulating conviction that I was the world's worst sap. Oh, how I admired and envied poised people! How I wished that I, too, were "master of my fate and captain of my soul," instead of the weak worm which I secretly knew myself to be!

A miserable state of mind. Doubtless you have shared it. Yet at least 10 more years had to pass before it began to dawn on me that EVERY OTHER HUMAN BEING ON EARTH FELT THE SAME WAY! But when it did dawn, I almost went ga-ga from relief.

"Sure and serene maturity"? People who knew their own minds? My eye! There was no such animal! In amongst the rich and the great led the trail, but never a thoroughly cool or competent human did I find. I interviewed famous philosophers, and they whined to me about their corn plasters. I visited our financial wizards, and found them fretting over cross-word puzzles. I sat in the Senate gallery of our national Capitol and watched cry-baby exhibitions that would have been promptly squelched in the woodshed when I was seven.

And they tell me that even Einstein can't remember to put on a necktie! And has been known to pout over his oatmeal!

So there are, after all, no grown-ups. We're all muddled. We're still trying to make up our minds over hairpins and mumbledy-peg. And these guys with the hard-boiled eyes and haughty lowls are probably just wondering if they look best 'n brown.

Whoops! It's a great discovery! It has taken me nearly 50 years to find it out. BUT WATCH ME LIVE NOW!

Just Folks

Good and Evil

I find it difficult to say
That all of life is good;
The best and worst of every day
Is little understood.
For that delight o'er which we smile
And strive so hard to keep
Shall in a very little while
As surely make us weep.
Perhaps the pain which burns us now
Tomorrow's joy may bring,
Yet who would call the throbbing brow
A necessary thing?
And who is bold enough to say
To scatter hurt we should,
Because the future has a way
Of making evil good?
'Tis only certain that we go
Along the path of years
To joys that we shall smile to know,
To pain, and care and tears;
And this is all that we can say
About life's changing stage.
There is a boon for every day,
A bliss for every age.

The Treason of Blackjacking Workers

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American.

FINDING IT IMPOSSIBLE to melt the issues and made desperate by the overwhelming trend toward Roosevelt, the Hoover campaign board, with its affiliates, is now counting on just two things:

On their theory that most business men are ignorant.

And on their hope that the use of the blackjack on labor will coerce it into "holding on to Hoover."

Mr. Hoover's managers are not thinking so much of the workingman as of the average business man when they count on "ignorance."

The story of how Mr. Hoover, solitary and alone, in the solemn watches of the night, saved the gold standard that never was endangered, is food for the morons. Even Mr. Hoover does not expect them to take that story of his on Wall Street—where they know better.

That cock-and-bull story, manufactured out of the cloth, in a conference of desperate politicians, did serious damage to the country. Mr. Hoover was rebuked by his own followers in financial and newspaper circles.

But this Hoover attack on confidence in the dollar in Europe and in our financial structure in America is to be continued by the underlings of the Administration, like Secretary Stimson, who parrots a statement he knows utterly to be bunk

Humorous Skit, Yet Not Wanted

To students of popular government there is an interest in the reactions to the Hoover campaign with its novelties. There are, among the cynical, many who believe it as easy to sell a political gold brick as one in stocks. This may be of interest to many who find their favorite radio programs shunted aside for Hoover speakers, who tell them that we owe our present happy state to Mr. Hoover's wisdom. A humorous skit, and yet not what they want.

In Chicago, and probably elsewhere, unemployed men in desperate need of money to feed their families are being paid ten dollars by the Hoover management to be interviewed on the importance of "holding on to Hoover." The interviews are written by the Hoover managers, and these poor devils, in desperate need, read aloud over the radio words that must almost choke them; and certainly must do damage to their self-respect.

There is brutal coercion in this trick. "Your children hungry, eh? All right, come over to the studio and read what we write about Mr. Hoover's tender solicitude for you and such as you, and we'll give you a ten spot."

That's the sort of stuff you are hearing over the radio—and the reason.

Blackjack Used to Coerce Voters

But that is not the "direct method." Terrorists of all political persuasions are partial to the direct method. And time is short; and the polls continue to indicate a landslide for Roosevelt. The strategy of the Hoover managers now is to blackjack workingmen who still have jobs into "holding on to Hoover" until they sink. This means going back to the brazen, brutal methods of 1896, when employers openly threatened their employes with dismissal until they acted upon the theory that American workingmen, in selling their labor, sell their citizenship with it to the employer.

That treason to American institutions so shocked the nation's sense of decency that the use of the blackjack on American workingmen has never since been so open and brutal—until within the last ten days.

I have before me letters from parties in Chicago telling me what their employers are doing to blackjack them, and my advice to them has been to smile sweetly and remember that they vote secretly. It is none of their employers' business how they vote.

Shows Treason Toward America

There is no language strong enough with which to characterize this brutal, anti-American and treasonable attitude toward our form of government.

This type of campaign is known to Herbert Hoover and has his approval; and it represents perfectly his attitude toward workingmen all his life.

No man with any respect for democratic institutions would tolerate such a contemptuous attitude toward the working masses; and if the time ever comes when that sort of brutality receives the sanction of public opinion it will mean nothing less than the disfranchisement of every man who earns his bread by toil. And that will mean the end of popular government in America.

Smile Sweetly—Vote in Secret

The plan of Mr. Hoover now is that the men who have jobs at greatly reduced wages shall divide their jobs and wages with the unemployed; which will reduce all the working classes to mere existence and not add one penny to the purchasing power of labor for the benefit of merchants. This would prevent absolute starvation and permit the Hoover Administration to hold on to the policies that war with economics.

And the plan is to blackjack the men with jobs into the acceptance of that program.

Our advice to these men is to smile sweetly—for the man who takes advantage of their necessities and the necessities of their children to reduce their citizenship to a mockery is not entitled to the respect of any decent citizen—so let them smile sweetly and remember that they vote secretly.

American's Home College

Questions and answers prepared by members of the faculty of the College of the City of New York outline what they consider a well-educated person ought to know.

TODAY'S QUESTION

What is the "subsistence" theory of wages?

This question will be repeated and answered Monday by Myron L. Hoch, Dept. of Economics.

YESTERDAY'S QUESTION

Does engineering present a field for women?

By Prof. J. Charles Rathbun, Dept. of Civil Engineering.

Herbert Hoover has stated that "the job of the engineer is the application of science to the increased comfort of safety of man." Women have been taking an ever-increasing active interest in the sciences and their application.

An examination of the profession of engineering shows that about 21 per cent are engaged in construction, operation and maintenance. In this work women are distinctly handicapped.

However, over 40 per cent of our engineers are draftsmen, designers or occupied in estimating, research or clerical work. Here women can compete with the men if they are properly trained.

Another 3% per cent are engaged in administration, sales, testing, consulting and teaching. Some of these positions are open to women, while others are not.
